City University Dropping Tenured Staff Members

By EDWARD B. FISKE

After a frenzied year of at-tempting to retrain without affecting long-standing tradi- tions of job security for senior professors, the nine senior col- leges of the City University system have begun to send dis- missal notices to tenured fac- ulty members. Officials of City, Brooklyn and Queens Colleges confirmed yesterday that, in order to meet mandated budget cuts for the coming year, they were plan- ning to dismiss a total of 921 full-time faculty members, in- cluding between 49 and 58 with tenure. The presidents of Lehman, York and Richmond-Staten Is- land Colleges said that they had not yet completed their reduc- tion plans, but that cuts among tenured professors were "pos- sible" or "likely." Only Baruch, Hunter and John Jay Colleges indicated that they would meet their retrenchment quotas with- out affecting tenured personnel. The invasion for the first

Alcoa Asserts a U.S. Envoy Solicited Payment Abroad

By ROBERT D. HERSHEY JR.

WASHINGTON, July 14—An unidentified United States ambassador solicited at least $25,000 from the Aluminum Company of America that apparently was paid to officials and political parties of a foreign country, according to papers filed by the company recently with the Securities and Exchange Commission. This was believed to repre- sent the first publicly docu- mented instance in which an American Administration official had been implicated in the continuing wave of disclosures of questionable and illegal pay- ments by American corpora- tions. The incident occurred during 1971 and 1972 in a country that was not named in Alcoa's S.E.C. filing. Neither the com- mission nor the company would disclose today any hint of which country it was or the ambassador's identity. A State Department spokes- man denied any knowledge of the episode, commenting only that, "in principle, I would re- ject out of hand the notion of an American ambassador doing that." Alcoa's disclosure came at a time of growing suspicion about the role of the United States Government in foreign pay- ments.

Is of South Africa Separate and Unequal

By JOHN F. BURNS

BURG, July 14—The youth's problem is not exceptional in South Africa, where financial hardship often forces blacks to drop out of a high school. But the death of a young man last year in a kitchen accident, which cost his family the $50,000 to keep him in school, was a tragedy. The young man took a job selling flowers a week, enough to keep the family's other education certifi- cate. In the school year beginning next January, the outlay for each white student will be 17 times more than for each black. Despite a growing budget for black education, the disparity

Mondale Named Most in Rumors—Muskie Not Ruled Out

By CHARLES MOHR

Jimmy Carter indicated yesterday that he had chosen a running mate, but he took elaborate precautions to shield the name from disclosure before he formally announces his choice today. By last night Senator Walter F. Mondale of Minnesota, who had retreated into seclusion, appeared to be the man most frequently discussed, and often recommended, for the Vice Presidency by those with access to and influence with Mr. Carter. But since such persons said that Mr. Carter had not told even his inner circle the name of the man he called "premier in my mind," there was also informed betting on Senator Edmund S. Muskie of Maine.

Earlier Plan Arranged

Mr. Carter had once planned, as he told reporters earlier this month, to give as much as 24 hours notice of his selection to the winner and the losers. However, aware that his choice would almost inevitably be disclosed in such circumstances and distract attention from his own nomination, the 51-year-old Georgian decided to delay his phone calls to the contenders until just before a news conference at 10 A.M. today.

NEW LABOR GROUP TAKES PARTY ROLE

Coalition of 8 Unions, Not A.F.L.-C.I.O., Is Dominant Among the Democrats

By WARREN WEAVER JR.

Organized labor, which lost much of its political effective- ness in the unorthodox Demo- cratic National Convention of 1972, is staging a comeback in Madison Square Garden this week, but the dominant voices are not those of George Meany and the old-line unions in the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations. From 550 to 600 of the 1976 Democratic delegates are union members, a substantial increase from the drought of four years earlier. However, two-thirds of these are the product of an in- dependent political drive by a coalition of eight unions that decided to end their risky reli- ance on a single labor-backed Presidential candidate. The Labor Coalition Clear- inghouse, set up in 1975 to in- sure a strong labor voice at the Democratic convention irre- spective of the primary results, managed to elect 418 of its members this year, many under the banner of Jimmy Carter but

Carter Gives Insight On Decision-Making

The following article, based on an interview with Jimmy Carter, was written by R. W. Apple Jr., the national political correspondent of The New York Times.

It was the most important day in Jimmy Carter's life. As he sat and talked in his suite on the 21st floor of the Americana Hotel, the prize for which he had toiled 18 long months—the Democratic nomination for President of the United States—lay only 12 hours ahead. He seemed as calm as if he were spending the day inspecting peanuts back in Plains, Ga., instead of dis- cussing in his orderly and almost detached manner, his choice for Vice President, his acceptance speech and his plans for the campaign. "No," Mr. Carter said. He would not name the man he had tentatively selected as his running-mate, not until a news conference this morning. He would tell the winner and the five losers in the Vice-Presidential sweepstakes by telephone only a few minutes in advance. "I thought about it last night," he said very softly, "and by this morning there was one man pre-eminent in my mind. It's conceivable that I'll change my mind—I'm not positive yet—but I don't think so."

A QUICK VICTORY

Georgian Is Selected at the Convention by Wide Margin

By R. W. APPLE JR.

Jimmy Carter of Georgia won the Democratic Presidential nomination last night. By an overwhelming margin, the Democratic National Convention ratified Mr. Carter's startling electoral ascendancy of the last six months, made him the first major-party nominee from the Deep South since Zachary Taylor in 1848 and installed him as the early favorite to capture the White House in November. There was no serious threat from the others whose names were placed in nomination—Representative Morris K. Udall of Arizona, Ellen McCormack, the antiabortion candidate, and Gov. Edmund G. Brown Jr. of California.

Thomas Cunningham, 79-year-old farmer who lives in Newbridge, Ireland, says it was the "best summer we've had." Steady rain in May resulted in quantities of straw and hay.

Irish Village Troubled by Lack of Jobs, But Enjoys Rain and Tries to Stay Tidy

By PETER T. KILBORN
Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES
MOUNT BELLEW, Ireland, July 9—Now that the carnival is over and most of the hay has been harvested, what seems to matter most here is the Tidy Town Competition.
"We have a Tidy Town Committee," said Patrick Flood, who repairs boots and shoes for a living. "People are painting their houses and picking up paper."
"We've never won," Mr. Flood said over a pint of mud-brown stout in McDonogh's combined grocery and pub, "but we get good marks for trying."

now three million, has been edging upward. Jobs abroad are scarce, and the United States, which absorbed millions of Irishmen, lets in only a trickle.
Irish farmers, like those all over Europe, have suffered the hottest, driest summer in a century or more. But here in Mount Bellew, where even black cats are said to bring good luck, it rained most days this week.
"Best summer we've had," said Thomas Cunningham, a 79-year-old farmer in Newbridge. "We had a good rain in May. Windy and rainy May fills the barn with straw and hay."

ple get around on bicycles or by hitching rides. There is no bus service between many towns.
The rural Irish, especially the older ones, do not know what to make of the agitation in Dublin to legalize divorce and the sale of contraceptives. The Roman Catholic Church is the focal point of family life and tradition that have changed little in generations. Although families are getting smaller, most have four or more children, and nearly all wives stay home.
"Divorce is no good," said the publican at McDonogh's. "You just have a good row now and then, and it's all over." But a young woman who was hitching a ride to Mount Bellew from Ahascragh wanted freedom to get divorced. "There are a lot of battered wives in Ireland, you know," she said.

More cosmic issues, too—the sort that preoccupy the politicians in Dublin—drift out to Mount Bellew, in west-central Ireland, to the many other villages and to the small, universally poor farms along the hedged roads of the countryside.
Unemployment is raging here, as it is throughout Ireland. The level is probably higher than 12 percent, the Government figure, because the statisticians count only workers who actually apply and qualify for unemployment benefits.
Most people in Mount Bellew work on farms or in shops. There are few jobs opening for the young, so the townspeople want a factory. They fear that the one factory in town, which employs fewer than 10 workers, is on the verge of closing.
Until 1960 Ireland coped with unemployment because the unemployed emigrated. Since then the population,

Mr. Cunningham lives in the house where both he and his mother were born. For 30 years he commuted to a job in the English coal mines, while his wife stayed home. In the United States are a sister, a brother and a son, who works at a New York cemetery.
"Northern Ireland is the biggest problem now," he said. "Shooting one another every day. Dropping bombs. But it doesn't have much effect on us in the Free State."
Another roadside farmer, Michael Kelly, and his brother operate a small place that survives mostly on hay, two cows and some calves. "Every year we take in five calves," Mr. Kelly said. "We feed them, and then in two years we can sell them on the mart."
Signs of Ireland's poverty—it is by far the poorest member of the nine-nation European Common Market—are inescapable. Much farm work is done by hand. Many people get around on bicycles or by hitching rides. There is no bus service between many towns.

560 military vehicles. It included for the first time an entire mechanized brigade. Tanks and other vehicles rumbled down the broad avenue from the starting point at the Arc de Triomphe, then split into two columns before the reviewing stand at the Palace de la Concorde.

Four military bands and fluttering flags added to the martial atmosphere, but for the most part the crowds were subdued and there was little cheering or applause. Foreign Legionnaires and paratroops did not participate in the march, and at times the most striking aspect of the parade was the number of umbrellas choking the sidewalks.

Fireworks displays that had been scheduled in many areas of France were cancelled days ago because of the danger of fires resulting from the drought.

In Paris, the City Council held free public dances at various sites.

At a fireworks display in Bordeaux, skyrockets flashed away from their pads horizontally and burned 12 people. Four of the injured were treated at a hospital, then released. The police said that supports holding the skyrockets in a vertical position had apparently given way.

Grain Harvest Damaged WASHINGTON, July 14 (AP)—Drought is estimated to have reduced France's grain harvest to 30 million metric tons, nearly 27 per cent less than the last normal-weather harvest of 41.2 million tons in 1974, the United States Department of Agriculture said today. That level is 14 percent below last season's poor crops.

Officials said that spring-planted corn and barley had been most severely affected by the dry weather. The wheat crop was not so severely damaged, they said.

Ex-G.I., a Worker in China, Will Visit U.S.

By ROSS H. MUNRO
The Globe and Mail, Toronto
PEKING, July 14—In the late 1948's a young man from Pennsylvania named James G. Veneris drifted from job to job and city to city. It wasn't much of a life.

Associated Press
James G. Veneris

Today James Veneris says he is a happy man. He leads the simple structured life of an ordinary worker in a Chinese factory. He loves Chairman Mao, Marx, Lenin and Mao has explained the world to him in basic terms. And as often as not these days, he says, he even thinks in Chinese.

What happened in between was that James Veneris joined the United States Army, got captured in the Korean War by Chinese Communist forces, and later announced that he was turning his back on the United States and going to live in China.

He was 28 when he was captured and now, at 54, he is about to leave China for a long vacation in the United States, where he will visit his 80-year-old mother, his three sisters and the seven nieces and nephews he has never met.

"I'm a man who has double happiness," Mr. Veneris said in an interview soon after having received his passport from the United States Liaison Office. "I'm happy to go back to the United States for a visit. I'll be happy to come back to China."

"I'm going to be in the states for five and a half months, I'm going to spend Christmas there and then I'll return to China and live the rest of my life here."

Mr. Veneris is the last of the 21 Americans to leave but he confirmed that one of resume his job until he returns. Cataract operations on his eyes have kept him sidelined. But, he quickly points out, all his medical care has been free. He still gets his pay and he still lives in a simple dormitory apartment in the factory compound.

"They treat me like a baby," he says, and means it as a compliment.

Nevertheless it appears that the last few years have taken their toll. He bears little resemblance to the young, rather chunky-looking man with black hair in a photograph taken in 1954. He is thin, his hair is grey and white, he looks closer to 64 than 54.

In 1966, after his first Chinese wife died of tuberculosis, he married a Chinese widow with four children. They then had two children of their own and the eight of them share the apartment, which consists of two small and two large rooms.

"That's another reason why you know I'm coming back," he said. "To marry a woman and have children and then just to leave her, that's a crime."

When he gets back to the United States he wants to find out about "new inventions, electronics, spatulas, things like that." Now he wants to know how much it will cost to take a bus from Hawthorne, Calif., where his mother lives, to his home town of Vandorgrift, Pa., where he hopes to look up some old friends.

The Chinese Red Cross is paying for his return air fare and for having two Western style suits made.

"What are they wearing in the States these days?" he asks. "I hear you can almost wear anything."

Asked what he has missed having during his life in China, he hesitates. Well, hamburgers for one thing.

"Smothered with onions," he continues. "With mustard and ketchup, and French toast. I loved French toast with Log Cabin maple syrup all over it. And a big slab of butter on top."

In a week or two, Mr. Veneris will fly back to the United States. He says he hopes there won't be too many reporters asking too many questions.

"Really, I don't know much about China," he says. "China is so big there are billions of things going on. I'm just a little spot, just an ordinary worker."

Moves to End Death Penalty for Civilians

uly 14 (AP)—The House voted 130-101 to pass a bill to abolish the death penalty for civilian crimes. The measure would subject to capital punishment by the Senate. The measure would provide for first-degree murder and a 10-year sentence for second-degree murder. First-degree murder is premeditated, second-degree murder is premeditated; second-degree murder is committed without forethought.

Today's vote, although one of the closest in Canadian parliamentary history, was not as tense as the vote on the second reading last month, when it passed 133-125. Nor were the visitor's and press galleries as crowded.

Seven members were absent from the 264-seat house for the vote, two seats are vacant and the speaker votes only to break a tie.

The abolition bill came after 10 years of national soul-searching and emotional debate over the capital-punishment issue. It also followed shortly after the United States Supreme Court on July 2 upheld the death penalty. The Supreme Court acted by approving death-penalty laws in Florida, Georgia and Texas, but struck down laws in Louisiana and North Carolina that made death mandatory for certain crimes.

The laws the United States justices upheld leave the death-penalty decision in the hands of judges or jurors but provide guidelines for them.

The Canadian Members of Parliament, before their final vote, rejected a proposal to postpone the decision for three months.

"We won," said Prime Minister Pierre Elliott Trudeau after the vote. "I'm happy," he said, brushing past reporters. "I've got more work to do."

Those who favored retaining capital punishment for some crimes said the issue was not over. It will be raised in the next general election, expected in 1978, they said.

"I can only hope the result will not encourage those who wish to assassinate themselves into history," said the former Prime Minister, John Diefenbaker, a Conservative. He favored partial abolition but refused to support the bill, he said, because it did not retain hanging for murdering the Queen, for treason or sedition.

DOUBLEDAY

Kenya-Uganda Border City Found Calm

By MICHAEL T. KAUFMAN
Special to The New York Times
BUSIA, Kenya, July 14—This city on the Uganda border is calm but vigilant. There are no Kenyan troops in sight and market women cross the border checkpoints unchallenged by the three policemen on the Kenyan side.

Only families carting mattresses and pots and pans on wheelbarrows undergo inspection. Several who stopped this morning explained that while they had experienced no difficulties themselves as a result of the deterioration in relations between Kenya and Uganda following the latest raid at Entebbe, they had heard stories of reprisals against Kenyans.

Residents of this market center, which lies in a cotton-growing region, said they believed only about a hundred refugees had arrived from Uganda since the raid. One shopkeeper said a few had come almost naked. Others told of having their possessions stolen as they escaped.

Across the border, a few Uganda policemen could be seen manning their patrol post. But townspeople here said they had not seen any major troop assembles on the Uganda side. Local officials said the nearest Uganda encampment was 20 miles away at Mjanji on Lake Victoria. They said Mjanji had 3,000 Uganda troops with some tanks.

Busia lies in the heavily populated Western Province of Kenya and is one of several highly fertile regions that President Idi Amin had said were historically Ugandan. It is 130 miles by road to Kampala, the Uganda capital, 300 miles from Nairobi. The closest Kenyan military base to this border town is 300 miles away.

There were no fears expressed of an invasion. One official said he had assurances that, in case of an outbreak of hostilities, Kenyan forces could be rushed to the area in minutes. In fact the greater fear evident today on the part of Busia officials was that Uganda agents, members of the State Research Bureau, might try to kidnap a white visitor to the area and present him as a Western or Israeli intelligence agent.

One local official said State Research Bureau agents dressed in civilian clothes but armed had slipped across the border and he cautioned Western journalists to leave the border regions where tribal ties and language groups extend across the frontier.

J.K.A. Karui, the deputy provincial commissioner, repeated the caution at the region's administrative center in Kakamega.

Premier-Designate Begins Party Consultations in Italy

ROME, July 14 (Reuters)—Italy's new Prime Minister-designate, Giulio Andreotti, began talks on forming a Government today while the small but crucial Socialist Party met to elect a new leader.

Mr. Andreotti, a Christian Democrat, met leaders of the small Republican and Social Democratic parties for a preliminary exchange of views. He is due to meet leaders of his own party tomorrow.

GUERRILLAS AMBUSH 3 CARS IN RHODESIA

SALISBURY, Rhodesia, July 14 (AP)—Black nationalist guerrillas ambushed three cars carrying whites last night, killed an 8-year-old girl and wounded five persons, security force headquarters announced today.

An earlier report from unofficial sources had said a white man had also been killed along with the girl.

The communiqué said Rene du Plessis was killed when machine-gun fire raked her family's car. Her father, Paul, 32, was reported wounded, along with Lorraine Lamb, 18. Mr. du Plessis's wife and son were not hurt.

The Government said the attack occurred 25 miles south of Fort Victoria. Informed sources said it had occurred on the main road linking Rhodesia with South Africa.

A man and a boy were wounded in two other ambushes in the same area, the communiqué said.

UGANS ABANDON

Entebbe airport was just the only means of releasing the more than 100 Israeli hostages remaining there in the hands of the terrorists who had released 143 non-Israeli passengers aboard the airliner.

Air France planes were sent from Athens to Uganda on a flight from Tel Aviv on June 24.

Israeli officials concentrated the debate on offering evidence that they said showed President Idi Amin of Uganda had connived with the hijackers.

Members of the Council voted to restrict the debate on the contention that Israel had isolated Uganda's sovereignty.

They attacked the American resolution as a ploy to divert the Council's attention from their complaint.

A member of African representatives, while privately admitting that they did not defend the hijacking, charged that the Israeli invasion of a clear invasion of territory, setting a precedent for smaller general and African nations in particular.

The United States and Britain maintained in the debate that it would have been no different if the hijacking had not been for the success of the Israeli rescue operation after take-off from Entebbe.

However, the United States and the Council said there was substantial evidence that the United States and Britain had aided the hijackers.

The United States and Britain's representatives stressed the success of the Israeli rescue operation demonstrated that the hijackers could have overruled the hijackers if they had so.

He also argued that the United States and Britain had been only temperate in their objective in sending the plane's passengers to safety.

U.S. Army Blocks German Tank Project

By JOHN W. FARNEY
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, July 14—The U.S. Army and its contractors succeeded earlier this month in blocking a plan, worked out between the Defense Department and the West German Defense Ministry, for the two nations to build common components for their new main battle tank. Pentagon sources said today.

The result has been new strains in the already complicated negotiations between the two major allies in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization over standardizing major weapons.

The issue may now be elevated to the highest level of the two governments when the West German Chancellor, Helmut Schmidt, arrives here tomorrow for meetings with President Ford. According to diplomatic sources, the Pentagon plan calls for Chancellor Schmidt to raise the tank issue with President Ford.

2 Tanks in Competition

The new main-battle tank has developed into a symbolic test of whether the two allies can standardize at least some of their weapons. At this point, each side is independently developing its own tank—the United States the XM-1, which is being competitively developed by the General Motors Corporation and Chrysler Corporation; and the Leopard II, being developed for the West German Army.

Under a 1973 agreement, each side is to incorporate worked out by former Defense Secretary James R. Schlesinger. In those discussions, the Leopard II tank is to be tested by the United States draft was agreed upon of a new Army this fall against the winner, to be chosen next week, calling for the two nations to use such common tank components as the gun, engine, power train.

The time the agreement was entered into, the under-standings at least in Mr. Schlesinger's mind, was that the winner of the competition between the American and German tanks would be selected as the common battle tank of the two countries.

Because of institutional pride and political pressures on both sides, it is now generally accepted by both German and American defense leaders that it is highly unlikely that the two nations can agree on a common tank. As a result, the discussions have shifted to the possibility of using common components of logistic importance on the battlefield—such as the gun, engine and power train linking the engine to the tracks.

At a meeting in Brussels last month, Defense Secretary Donald H. Rumsfeld and the West German Defense Minister, Georg Leber, discussed the possibility of standardizing some components of their tanks. As a result of the discussions, Mr. Rumsfeld sent back a priority message to the Pentagon ordering the Army and the Defense Department Office of Research and Engineering to send experts to Bonn for further detailed discussions.

Norman R. Augustine, Under Secretary of the Army, and Robert N. Parker, Deputy Director of Defense Research and Engineering, last month raised objections to the commitment to incorporate man-developed components of the new tank at the Pentagon sources, according to the memorandum of understanding.

When Mr. Leber came to Mr. Pentagon early this morning, his meeting with Mr. Leber was with some hope, that the memorandum formally signed. Pentagon officials insisted, however, there was no expectation that the agreement would be approved so quickly. At a meeting in the Pentagon on July 2, Mr. Rumsfeld, according to sources, could not be signed in because of legal and technical complications.

At an earlier meeting, Deputy Defense Secretary William P. Clements, General Motors and Chrysler representatives had proposed any arrangement would require German components to be used in their tanks.

The profit in main industry sources not from casting the net into the hulls but from the mechanical electronic component tank.

In discussions with the Pentagon, Army officials raised objections to the commitment to incorporate man-developed components of the new tank at the Pentagon sources, according to the memorandum of understanding.

ISRAELI DOUBLING LONG-RANGE FLEET

$15 Million Vessels Said Be Aimed at Restoration of Regional Balance

By DREW MIDDLETON
 Israel is to add six missile vessels to its navy, doubling the size of its long-distance combat fleet, according to authoritative sources.
 The vessels, the first of which will be delivered in January, will be built in Israel at a cost of $15 million each. The Government maintains they are necessary to preserve a naval balance in the eastern Mediterranean in view of purchases abroad by Arab governments.
 Only such purchases listed by the International Institute of Strategic Studies in London are Libyan. Libya has ordered 10 fast patrol boats from France and four 550-ton missile craft from Italy. Delivery were not announced.
 United States sources maintain that the expansion tip the balance in their favor. The Egyptian Navy, they are noted, while numerically superior and deploying large ships, suffers, as do the Egyptian military services, from shortages of spare parts. According to one source, a trickle of spare parts ships obtained from the Soviet Union has arrived this

...siles of Longer Range
 new Israeli craft will be with seven or more surface missiles having a range of better than 22 miles, twice that of those used in the 1973 Arab-Israeli war, and seven Arab warships sunk without loss to the Israeli navy.
 The boats will have a range of more than 4,000 miles, approximately that of the six missile boats that are the heart of the fleet.

Israel's emphasis on small, high firepower, speed and maneuverability reflects a change in many of the smaller vessels. Such vessels, when equipped with missiles, have the power of a World War II-era ship and are small targets for anti-aircraft missiles. In any event, Israeli sources would be beyond the country's resources to match the Soviet fleet for ship.

...ts From the Russians
 In the period of Soviet-Egyptian friendship, the Russians ordered 12 submarines, 12 destroyers, 4 destroyers and 12 missile boats to Egypt. During the Lebanese civil war, the Israeli Navy has maintained a presence off the frontier between Lebanon and Israel. At the same time, the balance between the Soviet Union and the United States in the Mediterranean is watched as carefully as the Israelis as that between their navy and the Arab

...while, there have been reports in Istanbul that the United States has asked Turkey for permission, required by convention, to send one of their new missile carriers through the Bosporus to the Mediterranean.
 The presence of a 45,000-ton missile carrier would not appreciate the big-power balance, sources say, since it has been built for fleet protection rather than as a target.

Palestinians Say Syrians Quit Lebanon Port Area

By HENRY TANNER
Special to The New York Times
BEIRUT, Lebanon, July 14—
Syrian artillery and armored forces today withdrew from strategic hills dominating the vital port city of Sidon in southern Lebanon, Palestinian officials said.

News of the withdrawal came a few hours after foreign ministers of the Arab League countries meeting in Cairo concluded a two-day meeting during which the Syrian-Palestinian conflict here was recognized as the principal aspect of the Lebanese civil war.

The Syrian action, though far from what the Palestinians had demanded, coincided with a growing feeling among Lebanese politicians that the threat of a Palestinian-Syrian showdown battle for control of west
Beirut had receded.

Last week, many officials and citizens here took the threat of such a battle seriously and fled the city.

The withdrawal from Sidon was in response to a request by the Libyan Prime Minister Abdel Salam Jalloud, who has been seeking to mediate between the Syrian Government of President Hafez al-Assad and the Palestine Liberation Organization for the last two months.

Four battalions were withdrawn this morning, another was pulled back yesterday.

Palestinian officials charged that Syrian forces continued to consolidate their positions in eastern Lebanon, where they entered the Moslem-inhabited city of Baalbek yesterday and that they had increased their pressure on Tripoli, the country's second largest city and also a Moslem stronghold.

Libyan troops belonging to the hitherto ineffectual joint Arab peacekeeping force moved into the area vacated by Syrian troops east of Sidon to supervise the withdrawal there,
Palestinian sources said.

The withdrawal was the first genuine pullback of Syrian forces in Lebanon since they entered the country a month and a half ago.

A symbolic withdrawal took place three weeks ago when Syrian forces at the Beirut international airport were incorporated into the joint Arab peace force, by changing the color of their vehicles and helmets from camouflage colors to white with green stripes.

Lebanese observers noted that it was the Egyptian Foreign Minister, Ismail Fahmy, who suggested that the Syrian-Palestinian issue constituted
"two thirds of the problem in Lebanon."

This pleased right-wing
Christians who saw the Egyptian statement as at least partial vindication of their view that the Palestinian rule in Lebanon was the key issue

As most Lebanese observers

see it, the majority of Arab governments made it plain in Cairo that they were not going to interfere actively with the Syrian role in Lebanon and had no objection to seeing the Syrians
"reining" in the Palestinians.

But the majority of these governments, Lebanese observers feel, are afraid of an all-out military clash between the Syrians and Palestinians that could lead to a generalized
"Arab civil war" and would destroy what remains of Lebanon.

Arabs to Send Fuel

CAIRO, July 14 (Reuters)— Six Arab oil countries will send fuel to Lebanon as part of Arab League efforts to ease the effects of the civil war.

Arabs will also send food to Lebanon and medical aid will be handed over in Cyprus to the International Committee of the Red Cross for delivery to Lebanese hospitals, short of drugs and crowded with wounded.

The New York Times/Lebanon Syrian forces reportedly pulled back from while increasing pres-on Tripoli and cons-

Con General, Sworn In as President, Vows to Back Democracy

MARVINE HOWE organized, reflecting the changed mood of the country after two years of revolutionary romanticism. Wearing a gray dress uniform with six golden stars on his sleeves, the 41-year-old general delivered his address with unsmiling determination. He was interrupted frequently by standing applause from the benches of the non-Communist majority—the Socialists, the Popular Democrats and Christian Democrats—that supported him.

The Communist deputies, led by the party Secretary General, Alvaro Cunhal, were a silent bloc during the 20-minute speech, but they stood to give a polite ripple of applause at the close. The single deputy from the extreme leftist Popular Democratic Union did not applaud and stood only for the national anthem.

The Communists' cold reception to the President was to be expected since he successfully put down a leftist military rebellion last Nov. 23 and then, as army commander, purged Communists and far-leftists from key military positions. It was his firm, decisive action in that crisis that gave him the reputation of being the only man who could control the unruly army.

Largely for that reason nearly 61 percent of the voters chose the stern, rigid army general, who was virtually unknown and is still much of an enigma. There was clearly a vote for law and order after months of confusion and lack of leadership.

When the new President repeated in his speech promised to respect the country's new democratic institutions and defend the people's hard-won democratic rights, his words were clearly aimed to reassure even some of his supporters.

They express apprehension that he could become another dictator like Dr. Antonio de Oliveira Salazar, who governed for nearly half a century.

Stressing that the days of "coups and anarchy" had come to an end, General Ramalho Eanes declared that "attempts to create parallel powers based on insurrectionist activity" would not be tolerated.

A New President Named in Uruguay; Democracy Vowed

MONTEVIDEO, Uruguay, July 14 (AP)—Uruguay's conservative Council of the Nation today named Aparicio Mendez, a 72-year-old lawyer, to be the country's new President.

Mendez will succeed Acting President Alberto Demicheli, 79, who replaced former President Juan María Bordaberry after he was removed by the armed forces on June 12.

Mr. Mendez has been chairman of the council, which has 21 civilian and 20 military members.

The new President said that he would take office Sept. 1 and serve a five-year term as Uruguay's 41st president.

Promises Democracy

Military sources have said that during that term there would be a gradual return to representative democracy.

Mr. Mendez told reporters that the Government counted on popular support "at this crucial stage so that in a reasonable period we might return to the traditional political parties, purged and normalized."

Mr. Bordaberry, a conservative rancher who was elected President in 1971, was ousted for opposing the armed forces plan for eventual restoration of political parties and elections. Instead, he wanted to write military participation in the government into the constitution.

Mr. Mendez was minister of health from 1961 to 1964 and is considered to be a conservative. Born in Rivera and one of nine children, he first worked as a carpenter's helper before his university studies. He has written several textbooks and has taught Latin American history.

The armed forces named him to head the Council of the Nation after Mr. Bordaberry was removed. Before he was the vice chairman of the legislative Council of State.

South African Blacks Thwarted Early by an Inferior School System

Education for whites is compulsory between the ages of 6 and 16. For blacks, it is optional, even at the primary level. The latest figures show that 75 percent of black children between 7 and 15 were in school, but less than 9 percent of the 3.7 million enrolled were at the secondary level. Of those, less than a third of 1 percent—3,009—were in the graduating class.

For whites, schooling is free. Black parents pay fees of a few dollars a year, plus the cost of textbooks, uniforms and sports activities. Though these rarely come to more than $50 a year, the burden, especially for large families, is often prohibitive.

While there are 12,500 schools for black students and fewer than 3,800 for whites, the vastly greater enrollment in black schools leads to disproportionate teacher-student ratios. In white schools, it is 1 to 20; in black 1 to 60.

Almost all white children reach secondary school, but about half the black children fail to complete the five-year course. While 2 in 3 whites between 13 and 18 are in secondary school, the figure for blacks is 1 in 25. It is common for black secondary school students to be in their early 20's.

The literacy rate for whites is close to 100 percent. For blacks, it is about 58 percent in the 13 to 22 age group. However, since half of all black students drop out before finishing primary school, reading ability among those considered literate is often very low.

Standards among teachers in white schools are much higher than in black. Fewer than 10 percent of the 69,000 teachers in black schools have the minimum qualifications required of the 45,000 teachers in white schools. In addition, salaries of teachers in white schools are 30 to 50 percent higher than those of teachers in the black institutions.

Wide Gap at Universities
The disparities are equally wide at the university level. For whites, there are 10 universities, enrolling about 75,000 students. For blacks there are three, with a total enrollment of about 4,000. An additional 300 blacks study at white universities, including about 200 at the medical school of the University of Natal. About 1 in 60 white school leavers qualify for university. Among blacks, the figure is 1 in 2,500.

There are no figures to measure the disparities in the quality of school buildings, equipment and grounds, but they, too, are wide. Most white schools are set in spacious suburban grounds, with ample playing fields and acres of grass and trees. Most black schools are set on dusty plots in black townships, with a grassless playing field, if any.

While the teacher-student ratio in white schools is comparable to the levels achieved in private school education in the United States, the overcrowding in black schools is worse than the worst that students experience in New York's crowded public schools. In nearly half of all black schools, a two-shift system is in operation. Students on the shift system average less than three hours' schooling a day, compared with five hours in white schools.

Photographs taken during the riots showing blazer-clad schoolboys tossing stones at policemen suggested something of the sentiments engendered among blacks of school age. In Soweto, the largest of the black townships involved in the rioting, a number of schools were severely damaged by fire.

Government spokesmen attributed much of the upheaval to young "tsotsi" the term is Zulu for hoodlums—who pose a serious crime problem in the black townships. But critics of the Government say that the "tsotsi" problem would be less severe if there were fewer school dropouts and more jobs available for those who fall.

Critics also maintain that resentments run high even among the small minority who graduate from secondary school, and the even smaller group who go on to a university. Frustrations among this "elite," the critics say, are heightened by the system of job reservation, under which most skilled jobs, including those of crane drivers and mailmen, are reserved for whites. The result, according to critics, is that even those who sumount the shortcomings of the black schooling system find, too often, that their advancement is artificially blocked.

Limitations imposed by job reservation are reflected in the paucity of technical and vocational training for blacks. Last year, fewer than 4,500 students were enrolled in government-run schools, with only 173 in "advanced" courses leading to careers in such fields as radiography, sewage treatment and public health nursing. Nearly 2,000 were studying construction techniques such as bricklaying, carpentry and plumbing.

Despite enthusiasm among black youths for motorcycles and cars, there were only 476 studying motor mechanics.

The Government's answer to its critics takes two forms, one philosophical and the other practical. On the philosophical level, it is common for ministers to argue that it is the country's 4.5 million whites, rather than the 18 million blacks, who have made South Africa the richest and most modern nation in Africa.

The argument necessarily accounts only for the entrepreneurial and managerial talent, since much of the manual labor from the beginning of the century at least has been performed by blacks. Nonetheless, those who make the argument conclude that it is only just that the rewards of the system—excluding, in this case, education—should go first and foremost to whites.

On the practical level, the Government points to the substantial improvements that have been made in black education in recent years. While conceding that great disparities persist, officials point to the large sums of money that have been spent, especially in the last decade, to narrow the gap.

It is against this background that the Minister of Justice, James T. Kruger, could assert, after the rioting, that the vast majority of blacks "are grateful for what the Government is doing to uplift them."

In 1955, when the central Government assumed responsibility for black education from church missions, who had been running most black schools since the country's earliest years, Hendrik Verwoerd, who was assassinated when Prime Minister in 1966, pledged that every black taxpayer would eventually be able to send his children to primary school.

That goal, according to the officials, has substantially been achieved.

School Enrollment Triples
Since the 1955 takeover, 6,700 new schools have been built, more than doubling the number the Government inherited, and student enrollment has more than tripled, from slightly over a million to the current 3.7 million. Moreover, the officials note, the original goal set by Mr. Verwoerd has been superseded by new and more ambitious targets.

reduction in the teacher-student ratio to 1 to 30, and compulsory schooling up to the age of 16.

The officials estimate that reducing the teacher-student ratio alone will require an additional 97,000 teachers at an annual cost in salaries of $180 million, plus $480 million for new schools. The shift to compulsory education, a goal so distant that no deadline has been set, would cost many times more, the officials say.

The austerity budget introduced this spring in an attempt to reduce double-digit inflation has cut deep into capital outlays for education, with a resulting slowdown in educational improvements. However, the officials note that the total outlay on black education has more than doubled since 1972, and, at close to $175 million for the coming year, is more than three times as much as the expected revenues from the income tax levies on blacks.

From the Government's perspective, such figures demonstrate a policy of magnanimity and generosity which, officials maintain, gives South Africa a better educational record than any other country in Africa. Officials point to literacy rates of less than 10 percent in many black-ruled countries, and note proudly that a number of prominent black leaders—including Robert Mugabe, the Rhodesian guerrilla commander—were educated at South African schools and universities.

Spanish Parliament Liberalizes Penal Code, Making Political Activity Legal

Arias Navarro, the former Prime Minister, as he sat as member of the Cortes, Spain's legislature.

MADRID, July 14—Parliament agreed today after a month's delay to liberalize the penal code. The revised code establishes the principle that political parties, propaganda and meetings are now legal with specific exceptions. Until now, they have been banned.

In the period between the approval of the Law on Assembly and Association and the changes today in 10 articles of the penal code, what was permitted by one part of the legal system was prohibited by another.

The Parliament vote today was 245 to 175. A sizable rightist minority sought to make the changes as small as possible and to keep the bill as restrictive as possible.

The measure was scheduled to have been voted on June 9 when the bill legalizing political parties was approved. But the Government backed away from a fight and agreed to a postponement, even though it probably had enough votes to win. A Cabinet crisis caused further delay.

Communist the Issue
Basically, the new Government of Prime Minister Adolfo Suárez González was confronted with the thorny issue of including or excluding the Communist Party from legal activities. The Government's attitude is not yet completely clear, although it had been reported ready to make some concessions on this point to obtain backing from the rest of the opposition forces.

At any rate, it has sought to keep its options open and a substantial group of rightists sought today to close them by barring the Communist Party by name.

The law on political parties lets the penal code define what kinds of parties are illegal and therefore unable to obtain approval for registration from the Ministry of Interior. The law therefore was inoperative without the changes voted today. Under the new revisions, the barred parties would be those that engaged in violent subversion or that sought "the destruction of the judicial, political, social and economic system."

According to Francisco Escríbana de Romani, who reported the bill out of the justice commission, this wording ought to be enough to bar "almost all the associations and parties that, politically speaking, should be considered unacceptable in any civilized country and, specifically, the Communist Party." Presumably the provision could also be used against socialist groups, but they went unmentioned because they are slated to be admitted into the new Spanish democracy.

To satisfy the deeply rooted anti-Communism of the deputies, all holdovers from the Franco era, the commission decided to make the exclusion of the Communists more specific by adding a paragraph to the penal code stating that illegal groups also include "those that, subjected to international discipline, seek to implant a totalitarian system." This was approved rather than a softer alternative that would have barred groups that acted against human freedom and dignity and opposed a multi-party system.

The burden is now on the Government to decide whether the Communist Party meets the descriptions stipulated in the new penal code. It must decide, for example, whether the Communists are indeed subject to "international discipline" despite the affirmations of freedom from Moscow's direction made at the recent party conference in East Berlin. At that meeting, Santiago Carrillo, head of the Spanish party, made a particularly strong defense of the independence of national parties.

The discretionary powers left to the Government by the Law on Assembly and Association and the restrictions they include are among the major reasons for the opposition's attacks on the reform program. The law has left the central Government and local authorities powers to decide on who can meet and who cannot, almost as much as it had in the past.

Last week, demonstrations in favor of political amnesty were allowed in some cities as banned in others — although they all sought to exercise the same right.

El País, the Madrid daily, opened its pages today to a jailed Communist, Simon Sánchez Montero, who could face an 18-year sentence if convicted of illegal association as a member of the party's executive committee. Mr. Sánchez declared that banning the party in the name of democracy was impossible as squaring the circle.

Writing from Carabanchel Prison outside Madrid, where he is awaiting trial, the 60-year-old opponent of the Franco regime declared that the Spanish party was not subject to any international discipline and sought a democratic system that did not bar anybody.

Spiral Persisting in Spain and Change in the Government

By HENRY GINIGER

MADRID, July 14—There were no riots, as in Portugal, but the shock, embarrassment and anxiety over the increase was actually not as intense as it seemed. The government was being rehearsed in the Madrid against inflation. The government's supposed friends have found its economic performance wanting.

Government economists say the only way out of the inflation is a "social pact" — in effect moderation of wage increases in agreement with workers. But with labor organizations in turmoil, the Government and private industry are having trouble finding valid partners to make agreements with.

By official admission, the old state-run syndicate organization is unrepresentative and must be replaced. But those groups that propose to replace it are still illegal, and in the case of the powerful Communist-influenced worker commissions will continue to be illegal for a long time.

A report on the economy by the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development remarked on the lack of an institutional framework for the successful negotiation of non-inflationary wage agreements.

Even Friends Rostle
The total effect has been to give the Government's political opponents additional arguments with which to weaken its overall credibility. Even the Government's supposed friends have found its economic performance wanting.

Curb on Breast Cancer X-Rays Urged for Symptomless Women

The Washington Star

WASHINGTON, July 14—An outside group of experts consulted by the National Cancer Institute has recommended that the agency discontinue the routine use of X-ray screening for breast cancer in symptomless women under the age of 50, according to informed sources.

A preliminary report drafted under the leadership of Dr. Lester Breslow of the University of California at Los Angeles is now in the hands of officials of the cancer institute and of the American Cancer Society. The two organizations are joint sponsors of a nationwide breast cancer screening program in 27 centers involving more than 250,000 women, half of whom are between 35 and 49. The program uses both physical examinations and X-rays.

Officials of the two agencies are seriously considering whether to make changes in the screening program. They have invited the program directors from around the country to Washington on Monday to discuss the options. The meeting will be open to the public.

Benefits vs. Dangers

The Breslow report will be made available at that time. It is likely to stir debate about the value of X-rays in early detection of breast cancer, which is expected to take the lives of 33,000 women in the United States this year.

The controversy arises from a concern that benefits in detecting cancer at an earlier stage through X-ray screening—a technique known as mammography—in women without noticeable symptoms may not be substantial enough to outweigh the possibility that the radiation itself may increase the risk of developing cancer.

The concern focuses on younger women, who are less likely to develop cancer naturally but are more likely to live long enough to develop artificially induced breast cancer.

There is no disagreement about the magnitude of the risks involved, and Dr. Frank Rauscher, director of the cancer institute, emphasized in an interview that the risks were likely to be "very small."

But, he said, "There is a body of information that the benefits to women under the age of 50 may not be as great as was thought when the project was started" in 1972.

The Breslow report is the first of three reviews commissioned by the cancer institute in response to questions raised by critics such as Dr. John Ballar, 34, editor of the Journal of the National Cancer Institute.

In a paper published in January, Dr. Ballar charged that there was "a possibility that the routine use of mammography in screening asymptomatic women may eventually take almost as many lives as it saves."

"Screening by medical history and physical examination alone will probably provide much or most of the same benefit without risk from irradiation, at least in women under some fairly high age limit," he said.

Cancer Society Demurs

The American Cancer Society said yesterday that it was "extremely reluctant" to discontinue a program that is detecting early curable breast cancer in women, including women under 50.

The society said that among 129,000 women under 50 screened thus far, the first examination turned up 223 breast cancers, 100 of which were detected by mammography alone.

Seventy-nine percent of the cancers found in these women were detected before the disease had spread to the lymph nodes, giving a very high probability of cure, the society said. Ordinarily, only 55 percent of breast cancer cases are diagnosed at this localized stage.

Howard Hughes's Private Life to Be Described in Book of Stories by Two

By WALLACE TURNER
Special to The New York Times

SAN FRANCISCO, July 14 (AP)—Howard R. Hughes carefully built to protect the secrecy of his private life is about to be placed by a book based on the stories of two men who were with him for a decade before his death.

The account, according to James Phelan, a free-lance writer who lives in Long Beach, Calif., will be based on interviews he conducted with two men who lived with Mr. Hughes. One of the men was a practical nurse and the other a personal waiter.

Except to confirm that he is writing the book for publication by Random House, Mr. Phelan would not discuss the project or the information it will contain. Other sources have identified the two men who provided the information as Gordon Margulis and Mell Stewart.

During Mr. Hughes's lifetime, details about his personal living conditions were among his most closely guarded secrets. Since his death on April 5, a few anecdotes and summary judgments about his physical and mental condition have leaked through the tight security screen.

Two Companions Reported

For example, when Mr. Hughes lived in the Inn on the Park in London in the early 1970's, he broke the established habit of total seclusion in a sealed room and went flying around the British Isles. The flights ended after he fell and broke his hip.

Competent sources said re-

Philadelphia to Press A Drive for Tourists

PHILADELPHIA, July 14 (AP)—This city, where predictions of 20 to 40 million Bicentennial tourists were made last winter, has decided to begin a crash campaign costing $100,000 to $200,000 to encourage visitors during the rest of the summer.

"This represents a shifting of gears based on the unexpectedly light tourist traffic," said Wallace Nunn, director of operations of Philadelphia 76 Inc., the city's Bicentennial agency.

The city's hotel space was not booked full even on the July 4 weekend, and tourist officials have complained that attendance is even down from past years at some city tourist spots.

cently that Mr. Hughes was accompanied on these flights by Jack Real, a one-time vice president of the Lockheed Aircraft Corporation and by a licensed British pilot whose name was not known to the sources.

Mr. Hughes also acquired a hiding place on one of the Channel Islands, and flew there several times while he maintained his apartment at the Inn on the Park.

At about the time Mr. Hughes left Las Vegas in November 1970 to live in the Bahamas, Mr. Real left his Lockheed job and became a member of Mr. Hughes's inner staff.

From various disclosures about Mr. Hughes's life-style that have come out at intervals over the last 20 years, it was believed that he lived constantly in hotel rooms from 1966 until his death, and that he never saw the outside world except when he moved from one hotel to another.

The disclosure that Mr. Hughes had left his London rooms on several occasions to fly again in airplanes, as he had in his adventurous youth, was a surprise to those who have followed his actions in his de- over the last 20 years, it was dining years.

A View of His Life

The picture that had been drawn of Mr. Hughes's existence was on these lines:

He lived in a hotel room equipped with a hospital-type bed. He saw no one except when he asked one of his aides to come into his presence.

The room's windows were sealed by black tape to prevent any chance of anyone seeing in, and above all to prevent any photograph being taken of Mr. Hughes.

Six men, called executive assistants, lived with him on shifts, one performed various tasks, such as making telephone calls, arranging to meet his whims, and handling correspondence.

Not until Mr. Margulis and Mr. Stewart, both Utah residents, turned up talking to Mr. Phelan for the book project was it known that persons beyond these executive assistants had close contact with Mr. Hughes over a long period.

It is unclear just what relationship the two men had with Mr. Hughes. Sources in Nevada said that Mr. Margulis had worked as a waiter serving Mr. Hughes's food while the billionaire lived in the Desert Inn, a hotel and casino he owned on the Las Vegas Strip.

Mr. Stewart was described by these sources as a barber who served Mr. Hughes, and who also had some training as a practical nurse. A spokesman for the Summa Corporation, Mr. Hughes's personal holding company, said that the two employees were not authorized to talk about their years working for Mr. Hughes.

Neither man could be reached to discuss the book project. Mr. Phelan would say no more than to confirm reports made by other authoritative sources.

These sources said that it was only within the last few days that executives at the Summa Corporation learned that the intimate details of the billionaire's secret life were being recounted and would go into a book.

It was not clear what the reaction would be and no comment was forthcoming on initial inquiries.

During Mr. Hughes's lifetime, no stone was left unturned in attempts to block publication of such material. In fact, several years ago, Chester C. Davis, the New York lawyer who is chief counsel of Summa, devised a strategy to attempt to block such publication of material about Mr. Hughes.

The device Mr. Davis invented was the Rosemont Corporation, to which Mr. Hughes signed over all rights to his life story, all his personal history files and all his films of himself.

Then Mr. Davis would argue that a projected book was infringing on Rosemont's rights.

On those occasions where it was tested in court, this device never worked, for the courts held that Mr. Hughes could not prevent others from writing about him.

However, Mr. Hughes's lawyers generally required his close associates to sign "no talk" contracts when they left his employment. These contracts usually provided for long payouts, and required the former employee to refuse to talk about Mr. Hughes's private affairs.

Dietrich Role in Book

Noah Dietrich, who was Mr. Hughes's chief assistant for almost 40 years, signed such an undertaking when he left Mr. Hughes. About 10 years later, in the 1960's, Mr. Dietrich entered into an agreement with Mr. Phelan, the writer doing the current Hughes book project.

An ironic twist is that Mr. Phelan and Mr. Dietrich fell out before the book was published, and another writer, Bob Thomas, was given the manuscript to rewrite.

Then the original Phelan manuscript fell into the hands of Clifford Irving, who used it as the source of anecdotes that he used to write the fraudulent "Autobiography of Howard Hughes" that became the sensational literary hoax of 1972.

Mr. Irving's claim of having interviewed Mr. Hughes to get those stories fell apart when Mr. Phelan arrived one morning at the offices of the publisher, McGraw Hill, with a copy of his manuscript and showed the startling similarities.

Meantime, Mr. Hughes's lawyers managed to block Mr. Dietrich from collecting any of the royalties from the version of late Howard's memoirs that eventually was published under the title of "Howard, the Amazing Mr. Hughes."

The company that published that book, Fawcett Publications Inc., as well as the Summa Corporation and Rosemont are all in Delaware court that Mr. Dietrich's lawyers persuaded a Delaware court that Mr. Dietrich should not be allowed to collect royalties earned by his disregard of his contract not to tell stories about Mr. Hughes.

The significant difference between events then and the situation with the current book is that Mr. Phelan is that Mr. Hughes is no longer around, and one of his cousins, Will Lumis, a Houston lawyer, has been appointed court to be the Summa Corporation. While Mr. Ha spent any publication of himself, it is at the offices of the publisher, Mr. Lumis is motivated.

Nevada, Mr. Lumis (UPI)—The closing of the late Howard Hughes was at the time of the court proceeding yesterday. The two are filled in Texas by Attorney of Texas to date process should not be allowed to collect royalties earned by his disregard of his contract not to tell stories about Mr. Hughes.

The significant difference between events then and the situation with the current book is that Mr. Phelan is that Mr. Hughes is no longer around, and one of his cousins, Will Lumis, a Houston lawyer, has

Two of Four Flu Vaccines Held Unacceptable for Military Use

WASHINGTON, July 14—Advisers to the Army, Navy and Air Force have concluded that swine influenza "made" by two of the four manufacturers is unacceptable for the 2.1 million active duty military personnel in that age group. The advisers endorsed the vaccine made by Merrell-National Laboratories and Merck & Company, though the latter produced a substantial rate of side effects in military tests. The Pentagon, if it accepts this advice, would buy this vaccine only from Merrell and Merck. The military vaccine is designed to safeguard military personnel dispersed around the world, where troops may be exposed to many strains of flu virus. Accordingly, while most civilians will get only swine flu vaccine this year, the military formula will protect against two other strains of flu virus as well.

The "Hifi" Loudspeakers: ElectroVoice Sentry III. Designed as high efficiency floorstanding speakers with lowest bass response down to 40 Hz. Electro-Voice Sentry III's combine a 15-inch woofer with a mathematically optimized vent, and horn-loaded midrange and tweeter drivers for extraordinary accurate output levels and significantly lower distortion than sealed speaker systems.

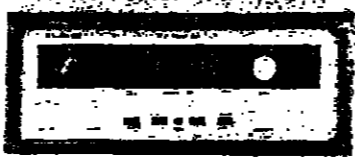

The Preamplifier: Phase Linear Phase Linear 4000. The Phase Linear 4000 is an ultra-flexible stereo preamplifier that also incorporates a Peak Limiter, Downward Expander and Autocorrelator to help correct the shortcomings inherent in the recording process. Noise is reduced to near inaudibility on all music sources, while dynamic range is actively restored to closely approximate the original information.

The "Remote" Loudspeakers: Ohm C2. Like the Sentry III's Ohm C2 loudspeakers are optimally-tuned for predictable low frequency performance, high efficiency and low distortion. These bookshelf loudspeakers incorporate a high quality 10-inch woofer, a 2-inch cone tweeter and a 1-inch dome super-tweeter for fast-lead response from 57 to 15,000 Hz.

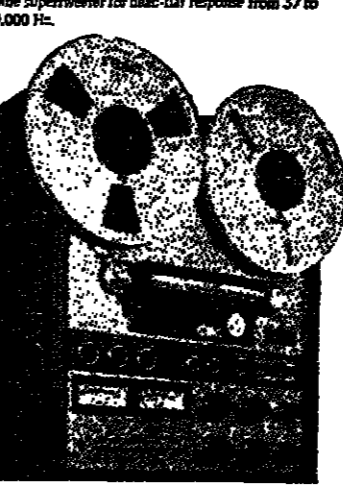

The Multiple Play Turntable: B*1 C 950. The B*1 C 950 is a Promotional 1 Turntable that provides the greatest amplified automatic operation for up to 12 records with the superior performance that has made it a 200 rpm 24-pole motor. An excellent Shure M91ED cartridge is included.

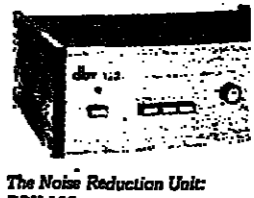

The Tuner: SAE Mark VII. With a FM digital readout display that provides tuning accuracy equal to that required by the FCC for FM broadcast stations, you can't ask for more accurate tuning than the SAE Mark VII FM tuner provides. Inquiry Team Starts Breaking Into Mine Where 26 Died in Blast

By WAYNE KING
Special to The New York Times
WHITESBURG, Ky., July 14—A mine rescue team accompanied by Federal and state mine safety officials today began breaking down the seals at the Scotia Coal Company mine where 11 men were killed in the second of two fatal methane gas explosions four months ago.

The bodies of the 11 men, two of them Federal mine inspectors, are still inside the mine, which was sealed March 13. It will be another two months or more before the rescue team reaches the bodies to remove them. They lie about three and a half miles from the mine entrance the rescuers dug into, 1,300 feet below the surface, where they were struck down in a flash explosion March 11.

John Crawford, assistant administrator of the Federal Mining Safety and Enforcement Administration, at the mine site about 15 miles from here on Black Mountain in Letcher County, said the two-month minimum time to reach the men was required because the mine was filled with a high concentration of methane, which must be exhausted to eliminate the possibility of yet another explosion.

The March 11 blast was the second to rock the mine in a 60-hour period. Fifteen miners were killed in the first blast, on March 9. The 11 killed subsequently had entered the mine to secure it so that they could begin an investigation into the causes of the first blast.

Concentration of Gas
The mine was sealed to allow the concentration of methane inside it to build up. This was done because methane is explosive only in concentrations of from 5 to 15 percent. Above or below those figures, it is not normally ignitable. Meters in the mine, according to Mr. Crawford, now show concentrations of about 40 percent. Oxygen levels are low, he said, about 5 to 7 percent, which also makes for a stable atmosphere, although not a breathable one. The rescue team will also be hindered because a large section of the mine, up to a mile, is flooded, in parts from floor to ceiling. That water must be pumped out. Also, the extent of the damage to the mine is now known, and some "roof falls," or cave-ins, are expected.

In order to penetrate the mines in relative safety, the rescuers, working in five-man teams with oxygen breathing apparatus similar to aquanauts strapped to their backs, will move into the mine in stages of about 500 feet each. One that far, they will erect temporary air barriers, then move back while ventilation fans clear the methane and other gases, establishing what are called "fresh-air bases." Workers can then enter without breathing apparatus to repair damage. Meanwhile, the rescuers with breathers will inch forward another 500 feet or so to extend the fresh air base.

"It's a tried and true method," Mr. Crawford said. "It's relatively safe."

Difference in Atmosphere
Mr. Crawford said that the situation in the mine now differs from that of the second explosion, when the workers and the inspectors entered the mine, in that the mine atmosphere is not now explosive. "The first time, we knew we had an explosive mixture, but we thought we had no source of ignition," he said.

Two weeks of hearings by Federal authorities in May have not yet resulted in a determination of the causes of either the first or the second blast. The investigation will continue now that the mine is being reopened.

At the hearings, miners and others testified that required safety inspections appeared not to have been regularly conducted, although the company witnesses said they were. There was also testimony that alleged gas leaks and at least one fire were not reported, as required by Federal regulations. Company officials said they knew of neither. Because the Scotia Coal Company had no trained rescue teams, volunteers were specially trained for the reopening. Working in teams of five, they are expected to enter the mine tomorrow. They were scheduled to do so today, but seals at the entrance proved unexpectedly difficult to break down with air hammers, and are expected to be breached tomorrow.

Today, widows and other relatives of the miners whose bodies are still inside drove up to the mine entrance periodically to check on progress. The widows picketed the mine about a month ago to protest what they considered a lag in re-entering the mine to take out the bodies of their dead husbands.

Today, Loretta Barker, mother of Glen Barker, one of the men, talked with a reporter at the entrance gate. She displayed a check from the mine company for $100 in back vacation pay. The sum of $31,500 had been deducted from it for "uniform rental."

"They cut that money off this check to his widow, and him laying in there dead," Mrs. Barker said. "When they ever take him out, I want to take the uniform back and give it to them."

Ralph Dye, a vice president of Bine Diamond Coal Company, the parent company of Scotia, said Mrs. Barker was "sadly mistaken" in her belief that the rental was assessed.

Rizzo Check at Midpoint
PHILADELPHIA, July 14 (AP)—The checking of signatures in the recall drive against Mayor Frank Rizzo has reached the halfway point. About 105,000 of the 211,000 signatures have been considered by workers of the City Commission.

while the uniform was on the body sealed in the mine. He said that Scotia had passed along the assessment from the uniform rental company, and that he believed it had been accumulated before Mr. Barker's death.

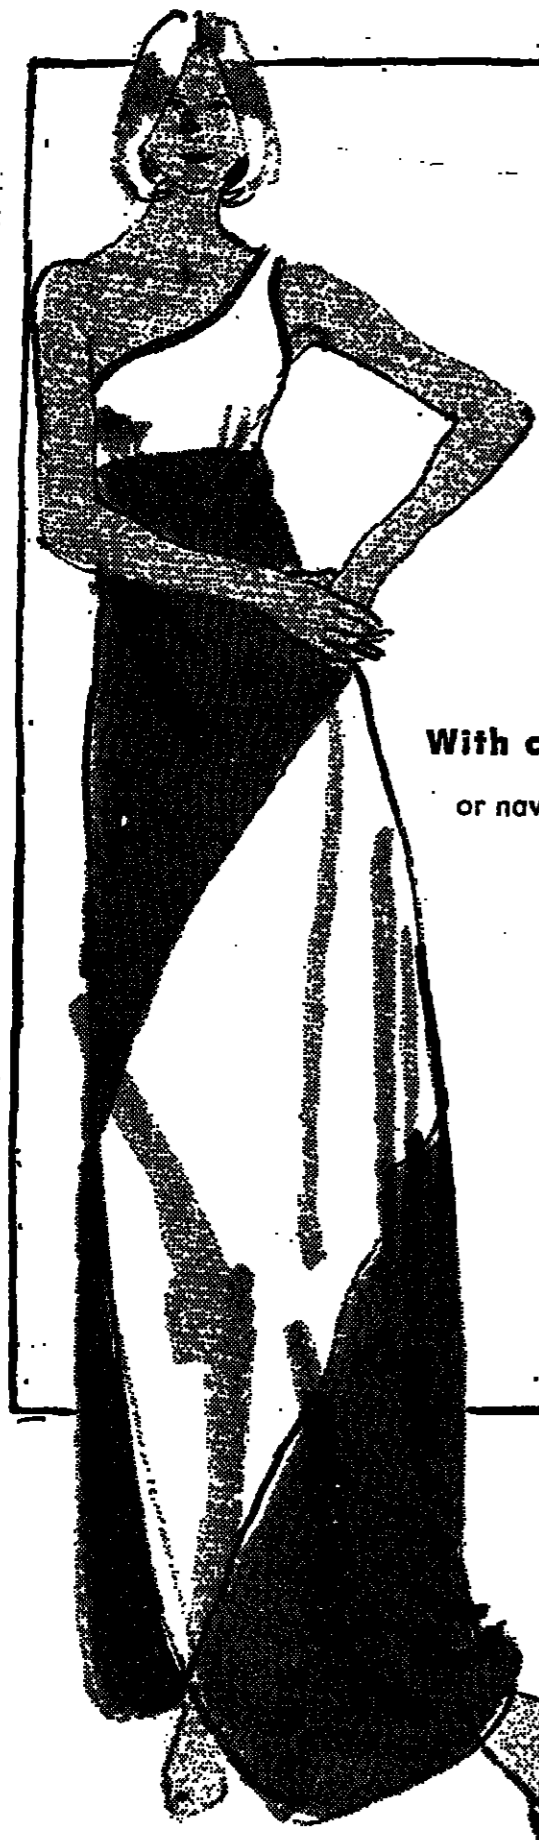

Mine Union Head Protests
WASHINGTON, July 14 (AP)—The United Mine Workers' president, Arnold Miller, accused the Justice Department of failing to enforce the Federal mine safety statute.

Mr. Miller said a record of nonenforcement so appalling that it suggests a conscious effort not to enforce this law. "Because of that fact Miller said in a letter (to General Edward) safety act has been only a mockery, by hundreds of coal men been needlessly killed." The Justice Department said it would comment on the letter.

Toll Now 2 Dead, 29 Hurt in New Canaan Accident
 By MICHAEL KNIGHT
 Special to The New York Times
 NEW CANAAN, Conn., July 14—The toll in yesterday's commuter-train crash here rose to two dead and 29 injured today while investigators from several agencies began searching for an explanation of the rush-hour accident.

Nineteen-year-old Elizabeth S. Hodden, who had been trapped in the wreckage of a Cosmopolitan car for two and a half hours as rescuers tried to free her, died this morning at Norwalk Hospital. Miss Hodden, who had recently moved here from Ohio with her father, was one of many passengers clustered around the motorman's cab at the front of the 5:27 P.M. train out of Grand Central Terminal. A second woman, Nancy Siegal, 36, died instantly of a fractured skull when she was crushed between the cab and a seat. The accident occurred about 6:30 P.M., when the sleek new train rammed into the rear of an empty train less than a block from the station here. Investigators for Conrail, the Federal Transportation Safety Board, the State Department of Transportation and the State Public Utilities Control Authority swarmed over the wreckage today at a siding near the Glenbrook Station in Stamford. It had been towed these before dawn to clear the New Canaan spur track by the morning rush hour, when normal service resumed.

"We won't know what happened until we look at everything and issue a formal report," a Conrail investigator said as morning commuters lined up at the station for their trains. The only indication of the previous day's tragedy was the crushed Red Cross coffee cups that littered the tracks. Survivors questioned by investigators questioned survivors and residents near the Grove Street crossing, where the crash occurred. They also heard them being applied. The investigators were also checking whether an orange warning light on the track that means "be prepared to stop at any time" was functioning.

A Jersey Municipal Court May Lose Its Authority
 OCEAN GROVE, N. J., July 14 (UPI)—The Municipal Court of Ocean Grove, a seashore resort founded by Methodists, may be stripped of its legal authority under a County Court ruling. Monmouth County Judge Thomas Shebell ruled yesterday that the law that established the court was unconstitutional because it violated First Amendment's ban on government actions to promote a religious organization. Ocean Grove, which has 16,000 permanent residents, was founded in 1870 by the Camp Meeting Association of the United Methodist Church. The Legislature gave the association the authority to set up courts and operate itself as a municipality. Judge Shebell's ruling will take effect in 45 days unless Ocean Grove appeals to the Superior Court. In the meantime, the State Court is expected to rule on an earlier suit contending that Ocean Grove's municipal charter is unconstitutional. GIVE REAL GRASS GIVE FRESH AIR FUND

Strike at Private Hospitals in 2d Week

By DAVID BIRD

The strike against 33 private nonprofit hospitals entered its second week yesterday with no progress reported in settling the dispute, and District 1199 of the National Union of Hospital and Health Care Employees began stepping up pressure against the struck hospitals.

Paul Yager, Federal mediator, said "it would be misleading to say there is any hope yet."

In some cases, union members who had remained on the job to perform what the hospitals termed "life-saving activities" were pulled out, and trucks delivering food and medical supplies were being stopped.

At each of the struck hospitals, union emergency service committees were taking a closer look at whom to allow in the hospitals, according to Moe Foner, the union's executive secretary.

"They are taking a more strict view of emergency services in view of the hospitals' refusal to settle the strike," Mr. Foner said.

At the Jewish Hospital and Medical Center of Brooklyn, in the Crown Heights section, blood-typing technicians and inhalation therapists were withdrawn by the union, according to Phillip C. Abrams, the hospital's executive director.

Mr. Abrams said that trucks attempting to deliver intravenous equipment and other medical supplies were being blocked by pickets.

Supervisors were taking over for the technicians withdrawn by the union, but Mr. Abrams said: "The supervisors are getting tired from working long shifts already. We're facing a deteriorating situation."

Emergency Supplies
Pickets at Montefiore Hospital in the Bronx said they were allowing only emergency supplies, such as oxygen, but would stop trucks carrying food and linens.

"I've had to cut back to four hours a day," said a hospital worker. Although many hospitals reported that they were still making do with supervisors and volunteers, the Committee on Interns and Residents, the union representing interns and residents, said that conditions were deteriorating to the point where proper care could not be given.

A committee spokesman said members were being advised not to take over strikers' work and to refuse to admit patients unless it was truly an emergency situation.

Hospital officials said that the interns and residents could not prevent admissions, but that in any case only patients that really needed to be in the hospital were being admitted.

District 1199 has charged that hospitals were trying to keep up their patient censuses, despite the lack of staff, in order to maintain hospital incomes.

The State Health Department reported that the struck hospitals had an average occupancy of 74 percent, well below their normally almost-full capacity operations.

There were sporadic outbreaks of violence on picket lines. At Mount Sinai Hospital the police arrested three pickets for throwing bottles. The police said one bottle thrown by one picket hit a woman picket who was treated for a superficial scalp wound in the hospital's emergency room.

A union delegate, Peter Savits, said the injuries resulted from the use of force by the arresting police.

The strike that began against the hospitals on July 7 spread on July 10 to 14 nursing homes and some workers in 10 municipal hospitals with affiliation agreements with the private nonprofit hospitals.

Nursing homes reduced their patient loads sharply mainly by sending patients home. A municipal hospital spokesman said the strike was having a limited impact there. The State Health Department said there were 1,772 beds available in the municipal hospitals in the event that it was necessary to transfer patients out of the struck voluntary institutions. So far there have been no transfers to the city hospitals.

Paul Yager, the regional director of the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service, reported no progress in the dispute between the union and the hospitals.

"We're still digging away, but it would be misleading to say there is any hope yet," Mr. Yager said.

The hospitals, most of them represented by the League of Voluntary Hospitals and Homes, have said they cannot agree to the union's request for at least a cost-of-living increase because the state is holding back on the Medicaid and Blue Cross funds they would need to pay any raise.

The union has agreed to put the matter to binding arbitration, but the hospitals have refused on the ground that they could not pay any increases suggested.

Top state and city officials including Governor Carey and Mayor Beame have urged the hospitals to submit to arbitration. Yesterday 13 members of Congress from New York City sent a telegram to the league urging arbitration.

STATE AIDES HELP AT NURSING HOMES

'Monitors' Sent by Albany Work at Struck Facilities

By PETER KIBISS

More than half of the 50 State Health Department staff members sent from Albany to monitor the care of patients in struck nursing homes in New York City wound up caring for patients and doing orderlies' jobs on Monday and Tuesday.

Manhattan insisted the staff members had been brought down only for reporting. But one staff member said they had been told on arriving that they should have come in old clothes to do physical jobs.

This staff member, who did not want his name used, said some had refused. He voiced his own split reaction: "I felt bad in one way that we had crossed a picket line. I felt good in the other way about helping patients. We cleaned patients, some of whom I found wear diapers; we changed bedding, gave baths, swept and mopped floors. I felt like a meathad about being deceived."

Dr. J. Warren Toff, associate state health commissioner for New York City affairs, contended the Albany staff members had been brought down only to relieve his own overworked staff of 200 for "monitoring." This, he said, meant to "survey the operations of the institution and report all inadequacies that are present—to identify and solve the problems."

Help Appreciated

"If obviously patients would need someone to feed them, to put a spoon to their mouths, I think if they can help, anybody would help poor, sick, defenseless persons," he added.

Nursing home directors, for their part, expressed appreciation for the state help. About 70 percent of their 4,000 employees in 14 nursing homes have been on strike since last Saturday.

Eleven of the struck homes were caring for a total of 2,182 patients, or 51.2 percent of capacity, by yesterday's state census. Officials of the homes contend their labor dispute is even more difficult than that of the 33 struck voluntary hospitals.

Mitchell M. Waite, executive vice president of the Jewish Home and Hospital for Aged in Manhattan and the Bronx, said they faced new state Medicaid rates that were not expected to be promulgated until September but that would be retroactive to Jan. 1. He said this could mean cuts for some as much as 10 percent below 1975 reimbursement rates.

William Adelman, chief executive officer of Beth Abraham Hospital in the Bronx, said his nursing home had a deficit of $394,128 during 1975 after all receipts, including philanthropy, and $81,000 in five months to Jan. 1. He said this could mean cuts for some as much as 10 percent below 1975 reimbursement rates.

Union Rooted in Social Struggle

By LEE DEMBART

"If there is no struggle, there can be no progress," reads an inscription on the facade of District 1199's building at 310 West 43d Street.

The quotation, from Frederick Douglass, sums up both the attitude of the union's founder, president and patriarch, Leon J. Davis, and the union's history from its beginnings in 1932 as a drug store union through its present strike against voluntary hospitals and nursing homes.

In the process, District 1199 of the National Union of Hospital and Health Care Employees has established a reputation as one of the most socially conscious of all unions, a union whose supporters think is still close enough to the workers' basic struggle for a living wage that it has not become complacent; a union for whom the labor movement is still a movement.

The Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. once called District 1199 "my favorite union," and his widow, Coretta King, is honorary chairman of the district's union, which has 100,000 members, 70,000 of whom are in the New York metropolitan area.

No Accident
The alliance between the civil rights movement and the union is no accident, for some two-thirds of 1199's members are black or Puerto Rican. In the hospital division, whose 40,000 members are on strike, the figure is closer to 72 percent. Half of the union's 20 elected officers are minority group members. Many of the drug-store unit's members are Jewish.

Until 1959, the union, which remains a division of the Retail, Wholesale and Department Store Union, represented principally drug store employees. Mr. Davis himself worked in a drug store before helping to organize the union, but today the drug division has fewer than 6,500 members.

In 1959, however, 1199 began organizing unskilled hospital workers in New York, who were then earning $26 to $28 a week, and many were on welfare to supplement their paychecks.

It was on organizing effort that labor had shunned, in part because hospital workers were poor and could not pay much in dues and in part because the laws were stacked against them. Mr. Davis has twice been jailed for leading hospital strikes, though since 1974 workers in private hospitals have been included in the National Labor Relations Act and their strikes are legal.

Davis Rejuvenating
"Where angels feared to tread, we went in," Moe Foner, the union's executive secretary, said yesterday. Mr. Davis, who collapsed from exhaustion Monday night, was resting at the home of his grandchildren in Connecticut and was not expected to return to New York for several days.

"We don't only produce social and cultural activities," Mr. Foner said, "we produce bread."
Under the contract that expired June 30, hospital workers had been earning a minimum of $181 a week, a substantial improvement over pre-union days.

Under the contract that expired June 30, hospital workers had been earning a minimum of $181 a week, a substantial improvement over pre-union days.

However, the union is paying no strike benefits, and it is now preparing material to advise the strikers about applying for welfare and food stamps.

"We struck for 46 days in 1962 and for 113 days in Charleston, S. C., in 1969," Mr. Foner said. "I'm not predicting that here, but nobody's going to starve us out. Our members obviously are going to be suffering. They knew it before they went out, and they know it now."

In solidarity with the strikers, the 175 to 200 officers, organizers and professional staff members of the union are on strike. Organizers start at $14,000 a year. All union employees get the same raises that the members get.

"You can't look at the union like it's a place for upward mobility into heaven," Mr. Foner said. "Not only do the members feel that this is a place for everyone here fights alongside them."

"We like to think that we're different as a union," he said, "not only because some of the things we do are different but because of the real democratic structure of the union."

Monthly Meetings
He said that the union delegates met monthly to make policy and that attendance at the meetings averaged better than 1,500 of the 2,700 delegates.

The union runs an extensive array of activities for retired workers, a training program to increase the skills of its members a political action fund supported by voluntary contributions from the workers and a camp scholarship program that this year is sending 400 children to summer camp.

When the union began organizing hospital workers in 1959, two years before the civil rights sit-ins began in the South, Dr. King sounded the keynote for their effort: "The hospital workers' struggle is more than a fight for union rights," he said. "It is part and parcel of the larger fight in our community against discrimination and exploitation, against slums, against juvenile delinquency, against drug addiction—against all forms of degradation that result from poverty and human misery."

the help sent by the State Health Department included a number of registered nurses. In a worsening of the strike, Mr. Schneider said District 1199, National Union of Hospital and Health Care Employees, yesterday pulled out Kingsbrook's only two renal dialysis technicians. The hospital has 12 patients using six kidney machines, he said, and appealed against withdrawal of the two technicians.

Issues in Hospital Strike

PARTIES—District 1199, National Union of Hospital and Health Care Employees representing 35,000 workers, most of whom are nonprofessionals. Thirty-three hospitals, 27 belonging to the League of Voluntary Hospitals and Homes of New York Fourteen Nursing homes, including nine belonging to the league. Ten municipal hospitals that have affiliations with voluntary hospitals.

ISSUES—The union seeks at least a cost-of-living increase, which was recommended last month by a three-man Federal fact-finding panel. The union says that under the contract that expired on June 30, about three-quarters of its members earned $181 a week while the highest wages, for senior social workers and social work supervisors, ranged from $18,788 to $23,541. The hospitals say the proportion of workers earning $181 a week is 25 to 30 percent, and that they have no money for any increases, since the state has put a limit on Medicaid and Blue Cross payments that now make up most of the hospitals' income. The unions have agreed to arbitration, but the hospitals have refused to do so, saying they have no money to pay any award by an arbitrator.

"The first thing I tell my customers is not to fill out the warranty card until they use the camera—"

Mario Hirsch

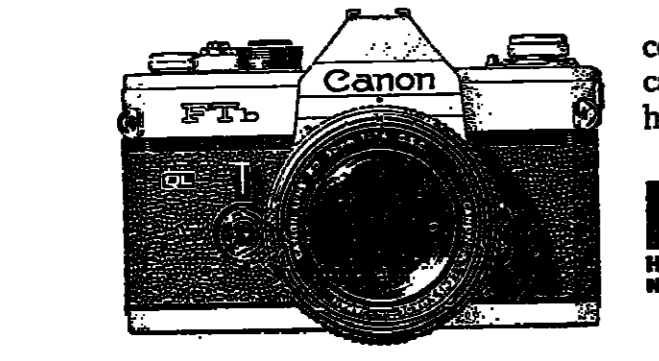

As soon as somebody fills out a warranty card the camera becomes a "used" camera. Which means if there is anything wrong with it, he'd lose the camera for a week or two while it's being fixed.

So what I tell them, is to first put the camera through the mill. Check everything out. Shoot a roll or two of film. Have them developed and see how they come out. Then, if everything is all right, fill out the warranty card. If everything isn't all right, bring it back to me and I'll take another camera off the shelf and give it to you. Of course when you buy a camera like a Canon chances are slim anything is wrong with it anyway. But it's just one less headache I want my customers to have.

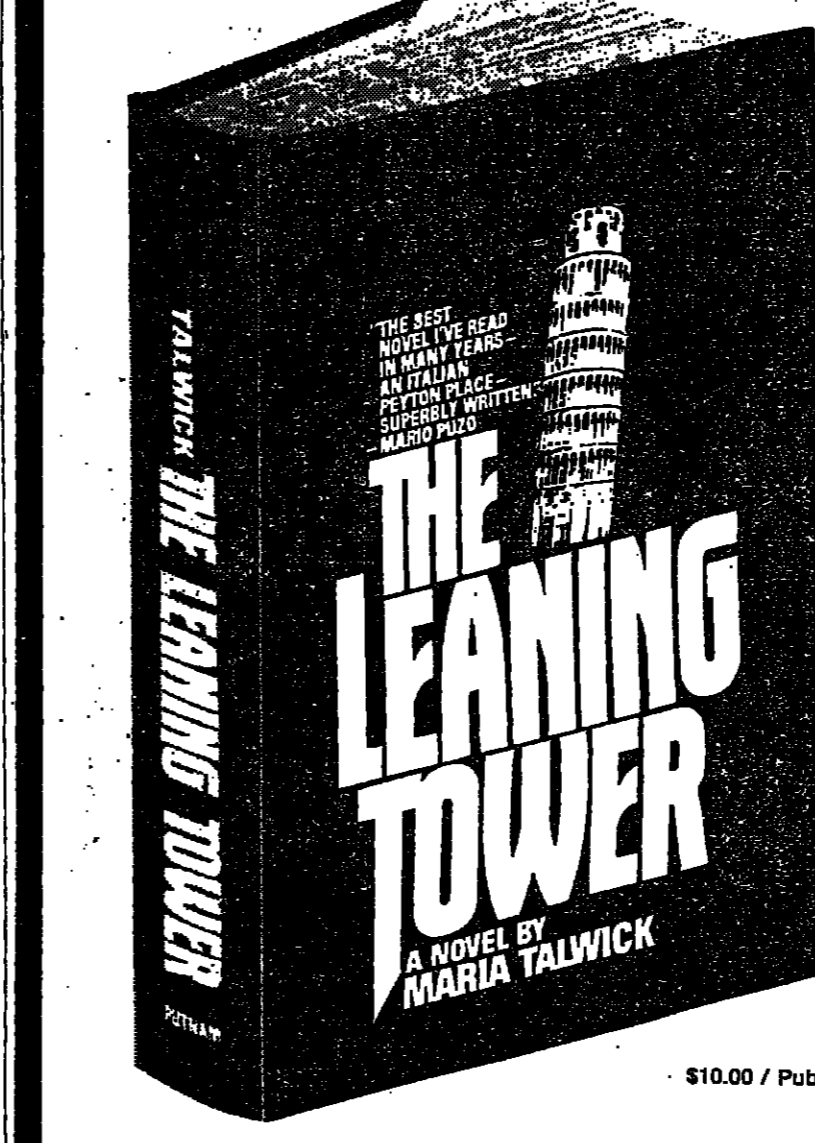

I guess what it all comes down to, is that when somebody buys a camera from Mario Hirsch, the sale isn't over. I want that person to be happy. Happy with the camera he bought. And happy with the price he bought it for.

You see the only thing better than a company that stands behind their cameras is a camera store owner who stands behind his customers.

Detectives Arrested Keenan's First Charges

By DENA KLEIMAN
Justice Leonard H. Sandler of New York State Supreme Court said yesterday that he had "difficulties" with the evidence that led to the indictment of State Supreme Court Justice John F. Keenan, who was charged last February with lying to a grand jury.

Interrupting what otherwise would have been a routine procedural appearance, Justice Sandler said that after reviewing the minutes from the grand jury proceeding, he had become "troubled" by how the special prosecutor's office under Maurice H. Nadjari had questioned Justice Keenan.

The defendants were also charged with lying before a grand jury and at a trial of a burglary suspect in 1972. The alleged perjured testimony involved the arrest on April 21, 1972, of three men who supposedly were part of a major burglary ring that the police then said had stolen millions of dollars from parking meters, telephone booths and hotels.

At the time of the 1972 arrests, the detectives were praised by their commanding officer. None of the suspects in the burglary ring has so far been convicted.

Mr. Ebbecke, who lives at 213 East Lake Avenue, Massapequa Park, L.I., was dismissed from the Police Department without his pension last year. Mr. Rice, who lives at 19 Intervale Place, Yonkers, was suspended without pay in June 1975 because of the inquiry by the special prosecutor's office.

Since 1973, the Safe and Loft Squad has been the object of internal police investigations into charges of corruption and other irregularities. Many of the detectives who were assigned to the unit in 1973 have either been dismissed, demoted or transferred.

Symbol and Victim of U.S., Bald Eagle Found in Peril

WASHINGTON, July 14 (AP)—After 200 years of nationalhood, the United States now may be forced to list its national symbol, the bald eagle, as an endangered species—a victim of shooting, pesticides and human intrusion.

The Interior Department announced today that it had proposed listing the bald eagle as endangered in all but five of the 48 contiguous states, and as "threatened" in those five.

"It is ironic and particularly disturbing to me that at the time of the Bicentennial the living embodiment of the spirit of America is in such a predicament," said Keith M. Schreiner, associate director of the United States Fish and Wildlife Service.

A southern subspecies of the bald eagle has been on the endangered list since 1967, but its northern subspecies is not listed.

Under Interior's new proposal, the bald eagle would be protected by Federal law in all states except Hawaii, where it is not a native species, and Alaska, where it is considered plentiful.

Pushed From Habitat

Mr. Schreiner said encroachment by civilization had pushed the bald eagle out of its habitat, just as it has displaced many other species.

"Losses of eagle habitat have been particularly severe in the lower Great Lakes region, New York and New England," he said. "In addition, in some areas of the country, the noble bird can't even hatch its own eggs. Pesticide residues have so contaminated its body that eggshells become thin and break when it tries to hatch them."

"Only a single nesting pair of bald eagles remains in New York state, where they used to be common," Mr. Schreiner said, "and this pair didn't produce any offspring last year."

The 33 pairs in Maine produced only 14 offspring.

The department said that shooting continues to be the leading cause of premature death of young and adult bald eagles.

Some people shoot them by mistake while hunting for other birds, while some kill them deliberately "because of an ingrained prejudice against all birds of prey," said the department's announcement.

Species on the "endangered" list may not be killed, placed into commerce, or possessed without a special permit, usually reserved only for scientific purposes or to improve the species' chances of survival.

Species listed as "threatened" may be protected by controls as stringent or less stringent than those for endangered species.

Interior proposed to list the bald eagle as "threatened" in Minnesota, Wisconsin, Michigan, Oregon and Washington.

While Alaska has an estimated 10,000 pairs of nesting bald eagles, the department said, there are only about 700 active nests in the "lower 48" states.

But it held out hope for restoring a healthy bald eagle population, through protection and other efforts.

Reagan Begins 2-Day Bid to Raid Ford's Jersey and Pennsylvania Delegates

By CHRISTOPHER LYDON
Special to The New York Times

NEWARK, July 14—Ronald Reagan swung east today on a two-day raiding expedition among New Jersey and Pennsylvania convention delegates leaning heavily to President Ford in the Republican Presidential nominating contest.

But Mr. Reagan's opening meeting with most of New Jersey's 67 delegates at an airport motel this evening was more an exercise in coyness than a public conversion session.

If a single delegate was moved by Mr. Reagan's hour of talking to vote for the former California Governor at the Republican National Convention in Kansas City, Mo., next month, he or she declined to stop forth to reporters waiting outside the reception.

And if Reagan aides had found any of the 15 unannounced Reagan delegates at-tributed to New Jersey, they were not offering details, either.

C. B. Tyson, a Ford delegate from across the state border in Delaware, seemed to speak for many of his New Jersey neighbors in the meeting here tonight when he said, "I was moved, emotionally but not vote-wise."

Senator Clifford P. Case, chairman of the New Jersey convention delegation, a firm Ford supporter, dismissed the meeting as a mere courtesy to "a distinguished Republican," as he described Mr. Reagan.

"We'll get in the end virtually all of the New Jersey delegation for the President," Mr. Case said. "I don't know that [the audience with Mr. Reagan] proves anything except that he was entitled to the reception he received."

John P. Sears, the Reagan campaign manager, who has arranged most of this week's delegate-shopping in New York and New Jersey, said teasingly, "Do you think they'd all be here if we were losing?"

But Mr. Sears and his colleagues on the Reagan staff declined to document their progress here with names of Reagan delegates.

These could be quietly crucial missions for Mr. Reagan, much more important than the last two state conventions naming national delegates this weekend.

Mr. Reagan will speak to the meeting of Utah Republicans on Saturday, expecting to win all of Utah's 20 convention votes. He will leave Connecticut's G.O.P. convention on Saturday to President Ford, expecting to lose all of Connecticut's 35 votes in the showdown next month in Kansas City, Mo.

It is in the completed delegations of big states—including New York, New Jersey and Pennsylvania—that votes seem unpredictable. It is in these states that John R. Sears, the Reagan campaign manager, has camp with his poaching and start the breakaway trend of uncommitted delegates to Mr. Reagan.

It is in these states, too, however, that objective estimators have the hardest time judging where the Ford-Reagan delegate camp stands.

In New Jersey, for example, the latest tabulation by The New York Times counts all 67 delegates for Mr. Ford. The President Ford Committee says Mr. Reagan may have as many as seven delegates in New Jersey. The Reagan staff says Mr. Reagan will get seven to 15.

In Pennsylvania, projection differs more widely. Drew Lewis, Mr. Ford's campaign chief in Pennsylvania, said this week that the President would win 95 of the state's 103 Republican delegates. The Reagan spokesmen count on at least 16 and possibly 20 votes in Pennsylvania. They may know better tomorrow evening when they see who shows up at the Penn. Harris Motor Inn in Harrisburg. Mr. Reagan has invited all of Pennsylvania's delegates and convention alternates to a reception.

New York, with 154 delegates, is also a promising hunting ground, Mr. Sears has said, for delegates mistakenly assumed to be Ford supporters.

In The Times' count, Mr. Ford controls 120 New York delegates; Mr. Reagan has 19; and 15 cannot yet be allocated.

James Lake, Mr. Reagan's press secretary, said today that the trip East without a visit to New York did not mean there was any discouragement. A New York trip "wasn't convenient" this week, Mr. Lake said, and the time is not yet ripe to show Mr. Reagan's hand in New York.

New York, New Jersey and Pennsylvania will all have legally unbound, pragmatic, "man-chine" delegations at Kansas City, all chosen in relatively unattended primary Mr. Reagan chose not to test.

The Republican organization in Pennsylvania and New Jersey have both known the inf over the years, even though 1968 Richard M. Nixon assured 18 New Jersey voters in what was supposed to be a solid Rockefeller defeat.

In 1976, however, it is Rockefeller liberalism that inates these delegation much as a conservative of political risks. The e delegations of all three are relatively free of roots enthusiasms.

These are relatively old "establishment" Republican organizations, motivated in Ford-Reagan choice main considerations of which R. mean standard-bearer will most to help their local Rej candidates.

CHANGE OF GUARD AT CONVENTION

Young Volunteers Provide New Security Image but the Force Is There

By RICHARD L. MADDEN

The Democrats have brook at least one recent convention tradition by replacing the private security guard with sternly policed the aisles 1968 and 1972 with a group of young volunteers who try clear the aisles with kindness...

But the most visible force inside the arena are 250 young men and women wearing khaki blazers with "DNC 1976" patches...

They range in age from 15 to 30 and they direct the crowd of delegates, guests, members of the press and others to their proper gates and seats...

"Doing a Fine Job" "They're doing a fine job—it's a new approach to convention security," said James McDonnell...

With rioting in the streets and antiwar demonstrations inside the convention hall, the 1968 Democratic convention in Chicago had the tightest security ever seen up to that point.

"The terrible problems of '68 caused security to be more stringent," he said. "We're now in a period where for the most part we can forget '68."

At the 1972 Democratic and Republican conventions in Miami Beach, there was less violence but movement into and around the hall was tightly restricted.

This year because there has been little bitterness or divisiveness the job of the volunteers has been made easier.

Some Refuse To Move "The main problem on the floor is people who refuse to move," Mr. McDonnell said.

A List of Events For Delegates The following is a tentative schedule of some of today's events of interest to convention delegates.

10 A.M.—Democrats Abroad Caucus; Vanderbilt Room, Waldorf.

Noon—Luncheon hosted by Governor Carey for Convention V.I.P.'s delegates and others; Windows of the World, World Trade Center.

2 P.M.—Black Delegates Caucus; Georgian Room Stabler Hilton.

Carter Gives a Preview On Unity Drive in Party

In a significant preview of the way he hopes to pull together the disparate ideological wings of the Democratic Party, Jimmy Carter said yesterday that he hoped to reconcile conservatives and liberals behind a program of national "common needs."

Mr. Carter, speaking a few hours before he was nominated for President, told a group of convention delegates from Western states that such unity under his leadership could be achieved without "abandoning precise concepts and commitments and ideals."

It came from probably one of the most conservative areas of the nation in deep, rural southern Georgia...

Speaking extemporaneously, the former Georgia Governor and peanut farmer continued:

New Group Successful Where Old-Line Failed

Following the strategy of the labor coalition, some union leaders sought delegate seats under varying banners. For example, Stephen Schlossberg, general counsel of the auto workers, was elected as a Udell delegate in Maryland although Mr. Carter was his first choice. He later served as a Carter floor lieutenant in the convention Platform Committee.

The labor coalition won an apparent victory on the floor Tuesday night when the convention voted to accept a minority report urging that Federal statutes be liberalized to give public employees more freedom to participate in politics. A major supporter was Jerry Wurf, president of the public workers' union.

Representatives of the coalition worked in support of Mr. Carter in the convention's women's caucus, supporting a compromise that urged state Democratic parties to "promote" the goal of equal representation for women in the 1980 convention, with the national party providing leadership.

In one of the few remaining disputes, the coalition will oppose Mr. Carter today on a relatively complicated issue involving delegate selection for the next convention.

Under the system in effect now, a Presidential candidate carrying a Congressional district could be awarded all the delegates from that district, despite the fact that the party had formally banned "winner-take-all" primaries on the state level.

To Review Policy

This exception to the general Democratic policy that delegates should be apportioned among candidates proportionally is to be reviewed by the national committee's Commission on Presidential Primaries. The convention's Rules Committee, by a narrow vote, ordered the commission to eliminate all vestiges of such "winner-take-all" primaries.

The Carter forces are supporting a minority report that would leave the commission free to make any recommendation it chooses in the area, but the coalition plans to work for convention endorsement of an absolute ban on such primaries.

While the coalition has assumed a political voice in the convention, its leaders concede it may represent a temporary sort of movement. For one thing, the more liberal unions may not find it necessary at the 1980 convention to organize this sort of access-board delegate drive.

And, in this year's general election, the broad financial and organization power of the A.F.L.-C.I.O. is likely to reassert its power on behalf of the Carter ticket, even though the old-line unions had relatively little to say in Madison Square Garden.

Eugene T. Kelley, a delegate from Arkansas, at the Garden with his wife, Joyce, and children, Glenn and Jodie

City Baffles and Amuses Arkansas Family

By ROY REED

The cab driver, a friendly, earnest man of advancing years, learned that the Eugene T. Kelleys were from a small town in the Ozark Mountains.

He said he favored small towns himself, and was thinking of moving to one. Where, he was asked.

"Miami," he said.

The Kelleys smiled, dazed once more by the gap between their perceptions and those of New Yorkers. From Rogers, Ark., where the Kelleys are part of a population of 13,000, Miami and New York appear to be about the same size.

The Kelleys are here for the Democratic convention, to which Mr. Kelley is a delegate. Since they arrive Sunday they have been repeatedly baffled and amused.

If the art of sightseeing is finding the beautiful alongside the incomprehensible, the Kelleys are successful sightseers. They walked out of the F.A.O. Schwarz toy store Monday drunk with pleasure and stunned by the prices. They had seen among other marvels a stuffed calf priced at $700. That is $200 more than they paid for a registered Hereford bull last month.

Glenn, 14 years old, blinked at a set of hand-painted toy soldiers priced at $450, and said, "They've got to be kidding."

The Kelleys are not poor or miserly. They expect to spend at least $1,200 on this trip. They are staying in a large room at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel and have not bothered to ask the price of it. They have bought clothing and gifts. Mrs. Kelley and the children, Glenn and 15-year-old Jodie, went to see a play, "Shenandoah," Monday night and they expect to see others.

Sometimes after hours of combing the museums and stores, walking among the skyscrapers and breathing the city's excitement, they pause on a corner and simply stand smiling. It is the smile of people who know a secret.

Their secret is a deeply held belief that they and perhaps a few million other Americans of their station have the best of two worlds. As they see it, they have the stability and contentment of living in a small town and because they are financially comfortable, they have the special periodic refreshment that only a city can offer.

Hundreds of Families

That was once the privilege of a handful at the top in Rogers and towns like it. Thanks to growing affluence, at least a few hundred Rogers families now visit New York or other cities regularly.

The Kelleys have divided their time on this trip between the convention and the city.

Mrs. Kelley and the children got guest passes and spent nine hours at the convention Tuesday. For Mrs. Kelley and Jodie it was especially exciting. There was Jacqueline Onassis down in front of them, and then suddenly, like the sensation of a hot hand, she had stumbled onto St. Saks Fifth Avenue, where came Paul Newman.

"I thought I was going to have to tie Mom to her seat," Jodie said.

Glenn took the convention more evenly. He shot some movies to use in his ninth-grade civics class next fall, then settled back to listen to the speakers.

About 9 P.M., during the 30th or 40th speech, his mother heard music over the drama from the convention floor and caught him playing a tune with his comb and a piece of paper.

Everyone was a little heavy in the head yesterday morning, having stayed up until 1 A.M. before walking on Fifth Avenue, talking politics and eating a midnight snack at a delicatessen.

They were revived somewhat by the mid-morning cab ride up Park Avenue. The talk turned to real estate.

The driver said the rent on a Park Avenue apartment large enough to accommodate the four of them, not counting the three youngest daughters back home in Rogers, would cost about $20,000 a year.

The Kelleys calculated that their new five-bedroom, naïve stone house, if it were moved from its wooded hill in Benton County and set down on Park Avenue, ought to rent for about $30,000 a year.

Kennedy, in Minor Role, Still Shining Like a Star

By LINDA CHARLTON

For the first time in 20 years, there is a Democratic convention at which the Kennedy family is not playing a major role, but even in eclipse, Senator Edward M. Kennedy, the family's last male of his generation, can still make a crowd applaud him more than his words.

Senator Kennedy, who has been staying "with the family" in New York, made his first public address—a short informal talk, but the closest thing to a real speech he has made this week—to a group of about 250 "health-care activists," including convention delegates, at the Americana Hotel last night.

Jimmy Carter's headquarters are at the Americana, and it is the Carter mystique and the Carter family, from the precocious Amy (the Carters' 8-year-old daughter) to white-haired Miss Lillian (his mother), that are all-pervasive, as the Kennedy clan was in its day.

Miss Lillian, in fact, spoke briefly at the same reception at which Mr. Kennedy gave his talk while the Senator entered and stood quietly at the back of the room with his sisters, Jean Smith and Pat Lawford, and his son, Teddy.

Within his immediate orbit, there was a stir of interest and a sparkle of flashbulbs. And his brief speech roused the audience to a sort of intense enthusiasm, applause pitched beyond what his words—a guarantee that "good quality health care" would be a reality in the Carter Administration—would seem to have justified.

For many years, a Democratic convention without a Kennedy speech or major appearance would have been as nearly as unthinkable as one without the national anthem. But that is not the case this year.

The Senator turned down a request to address the convention on the subject of health care. He said that he had a prior engagement at a Democratic fund-raising event, but many people wondered if, even now, a Kennedy would accept so insignificant an assignment.

So he is not likely to address the convention at all, according to his staff, unless he is asked by whoever Mr. Carter's Vice-Presidential choice turns out to be, to make a speech of introduction. It is not reported, that Senator Kennedy and Mr. Carter do not get along, but that there is nothing less likely to be welcomed by a new monarch than a remnant of the old dynasty.

Nor can Mr. Kennedy, who is reported to have said some cutting things about Mr. Carter, but only in private, be expected to welcome the sight of another extended family in the place of honor occupied by his own clan for so long.

Senator Kennedy's decision to come to New York this week was not made until the last minute. And now that he is here, with no particular function to perform, not even as a delegate, he is scarcely involved in all the excitement. An aide had to call Charles Flaherty, the Massachusetts state chairman, yesterday afternoon to find out what the delegation would be doing to determine the best moment for the Senator to visit.

The senator decided to go to the convention last night, arriving about 9 P.M., tactfully before the nomination of Mr. Carter. He took a seat in the guest area, rather than with the delegate. There was 30 seconds of applause, but not the sort of that the Kennedys used to hear.

Interviewed later on NBC-TV by Walter Cronkite, Mr. Kennedy said that he spoke to Mr. Carter "several days ago and indicated I'd be glad to assist his campaign, adding, 'I'd be glad to be of whatever help I can.'"

Earlier, he had replied to a question about whether he would have a role in the Carter campaign by saying, "I have my own re-election campaign."

He said that he had not been approached by Mr. Carter or his staff about the Vice Presidency. "I had really made my position very clear," he said, "I want to go back to the United States Senate."

Asked about 1984, he said, "Time passes on. I think you don't have to be a President of the United States to make a difference."

At the reception, the Senator, his hair slicked tight to his head, was neither subdued nor exuberant, but simply relaxed, simply being the Senator from Massachusetts. He introduced and pointed out his sisters and his son to the crowd. When he was through, he moved back from the microphone and stood at the back of the platform for the next speaker, Senator Warren G. Magnuson of Washington.

Senator Kennedy had talked of the health needs of all Americans, but then tied himself again to his own political parish, saying that Americans "in Georgia, as well as in Chicago and the mill towns of my state" were all very concerned about health care.

Like everything else in the Americana, in the convention and possibly the entire city for this week, this was a Carter-dominated affair, although Senators Kennedy and Ernest Hollings of South Carolina, were listed, along with Mrs. Mary Lasker and Leonard Woodcock, president of the United Auto Workers as the hosts of the reception.

Senator Kennedy did not arrive until nearly an hour after the reception began. One of those present said, with a shrug and a half-smile, "Well, he's the star."

Stolen Pants Found; Beame Is Thanked

By FRANCIS X. CLINES

Down on the convention floor, two politicians were huddling, one thinking the other for finding out about his lost trousers.

Mayor Beame, whose city police force tracked down two suspected pants purloiners, accepted the thanks of James Curly, who walked over from the Washington state delegation when he got word that his wallet had been recovered. The trousers were taken from his un-

Over in the New York delegation, City Councilman Ramon Velaz, who is challenging Representative Herman Badillo of the Bronx, makes sure he works his way over to the Puerto Rican delegation. And state Senator Robert Garcia, a Badillo partisan in his heavily Hispanic Bronx district, makes sure he follows Mr. Velaz, over to the delegation for a bit of unofficial equal time.

Arthur Levitt, the New York State Comptroller, was able to attend a morning caucus and go to work in Albany before returning for last night's session at the Garden. And local lawyer-delegate Harold Fisher, a member of Governor Carey's inner circle, have been able to wedge in a court appearance or two when the convention doings have flagged.

Mayor Richard J. Daley of Chicago submitted to an interview with two 12-year-old convention correspondents from Children's Express, a news sheet put together by youngsters, and soon after some easy opening questions, was asked to comment on the Chicago convention in 1968 and the riots that occurred there.

"Don't believe everything you hear, dear, ha ha ha," Mr. Daley said. After some more fencing, the children persisted and asked for his version. But the Mayor declined. "We've got so many things to do today it's more important than talking about ancient history," he said.

The big goal this week is for politicians and politician watchers to get some member of the Carter family to appear in person at business and political events. Thus, Walter Cronkite, the CBS anchor man, was working on coaxing Jimmy Carter's mother, Lillian, to appear with him in one of the TV booths that look out on the convention scene like stained-glass windows.

Further from favor, the New York delegation, which offered no great support to Mr. Carter in the primary last April, obtained a visit from a brother-in-law of Mr. Carter at their breakfast caucus yesterday.

The man's identity, Robert Stapleton, a veterinarian locked hotel room, and the news of their recovery was the best of "contracts"—personal favors—that one politician could offer another this week about the Vice-Presidential nomination.

Life down below the speaking platform often proves far more human and less political than that suggested through the lenses of TV cameras sweeping the throng and catching numerous delegates moving, bumping and passing one another, like ants below a gleaming picnic table. Clearly, there hasn't been much in the way of floor fights this week, except for the two gray and white kittens that occasionally venture forth from under the false floor and chase each other about.

But the delegates from the metropolitan area have a special advantage—they're able to get some work done. For the full-time politicians, there is, of course, the ability to work the crowds. Representative Peter W. Rodino Jr. of

Convention Applauds Antiterrorist Stand

WASHINGTON, July 14 (UPI)—The Democratic National Convention applauded Tuesday in endorsing coordinated action by nations against international terrorism.

Gov. Wendell R. Anderson of Minnesota, chairman of the Platform Committee, made a "personal statement" to the convention on the detention of hostages from a hijacked airliner in Uganda and their rescue by Israeli military forces.

The statement came after the platform was drafted. Mr. Anderson called the Israeli rescue "no less a landmark than Valley Forge."

"We must remind the world that the United Nations is obligated by the principles of its charter to coordinate the actions of nations against international terrorism," he said.

He said that the United States should "begin to register strong concern" against governments that aid terrorists or refuse to take "real precautions" against them.

"We're already well-known tonight just makes it official," said Buford Reese, as local women passed out free cakes and cookies, teen-agers chattered and residents and friends watched the New York nomination proceedings on five television sets outside on Main Street.

Mr. Reese, a local junior high school principal who calls himself one of the Carter Peanut Brigade, said people from 42 states and 22 foreign countries had visited Plains since Easter. As hundreds of well wishers poured into town from surrounding counties, Plains took on the atmosphere of an old time country fair.

"Miracle" was the word used most often by visitors tonight to explain Mr. Carter's success so far. But the hometown story—four months of volunteers were not using that word. Mr. Reese was putting in his usual 10-hour volunteer day, helping arrange festivities, showing people around and answering questions. His wife was at the New York convention. He bought an airplane ticket to go to, but then decided he could be of more help by staying home and working.

He was putting around, helping the "TV boys" set up their equipment to make sure that the Carter family in New York got the added boost of seeing their friends and neighbors back home cheering for them all the way.

"It's important," he said, demonstrating how Mr. Carter bets by—even on big occasions like tonight—with a lot of help from his little friends. Mr. Reese, who is 45 years old, lost his right arm in a hunting accident 30 year ago.

Main Street, in front of the Carter headquarters in Plains, was blocked off tonight at 8:30 P.M. for the festivities. Two high school bands were bused in from nearby towns to play pop music. A rock band called "The Fox" provided sound for teen-age street dancing. All the women in Sumner County were invited to bring a dish to help feed the well wishers. Local men sold soft drinks. Posters and banners were waved in front of television cameras, which, in turn, carried the well-planned message from Plains tonight to the Carter family, the nation, and many foreign countries.

"We all believed a long time ago that this would happen," said Mr. Reese. "Plains will never really be the same after tonight. We knew that a long time ago, too. But we're trying to keep it pretty much the same as possible. I think people appreciate it."

President, 63 and Healthy, Treated to Lunch by Wife

By PHILIP SHABECOFF
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, July 14—President Ford celebrated his 63d birthday today with his doctor proclaiming him in "excellent health."

As a surprise, his wife Betty took him to lunch at the fashionable Sans Souci Restaurant near the White House. He had a chef's salad preceded by two martinis. Mr. and Mrs. Ford also shared a half bottle of white wine sent over by reporters and a cake, heavily laced with liquor, presented by the restaurant.

The President received this morning a six-month "interval physical examination" by his personal physician, William M. Lukash, who later issued a statement saying that "the President feels exceptionally fit and is looking forward to continued good health."

At today's news briefing, the White House press secretary, Ron Nessen, said that the President had made "good progress" last week in picking up delegate support in his contest with Ronald Reagan for the Republican Presidential nomination and expected to make "further progress" this week.

Mr. Nessen added that the President expected to have the 1,130 votes he needs for nomination before going to the convention, which opens in Kansas City on Aug. 16. Another aide, who is monitoring the delegate race, said that Mr. Ford would have considerably more than the minimum required for nomination by the time the first roll call was taken.

Mr. Ford will travel to Hartford Saturday to speak to delegates at the Connecticut Republican

Defense Fund Bill Signed

WASHINGTON, July 14 (AP)—President Ford signed a $32.5 billion weapons procurement bill today that authorizes production of the new B1 bomber and a record $6.7 billion naval shipbuilding program.

At the same time, he called for more efforts to cut waste in defense spending. Also signed by the President was a bill appropriating $8.3 billion in fiscal year 1977 for the Treasury Department, Postal Service, General Services Administration, the Civil Service Commission and the Executive Office of the President.

A third measure signed provides $8.6 billion in 1977 budget authority for activities of the State, Justice and Commerce Departments, the Federal Judiciary, the Small Business Administration and the United States Information Agency.

The big authorization bill for the Defense Department eliminated a 1 percent "kicker" in cost-of-living increases in annuities for military retirees. On the B1 bomber, the bill permits spending of $1 billion for the first three operating models, provided Congress appropriates the money in a bill to be considered later.

Mr. Ford, in a statement, congratulated Congress for passing the defense authorization bill in time for it to become law before the start of the fiscal year.

But he had some criticism, too, saying Congress "has not approved a number of essential defense programs" and had added funds to the fiscal 1977 budget that he believed were not needed in that year.

It's been a week of surprises all around. Democratic conventioneers are pleasantly impressed with the city (one delegate even said that the city was clean), while fashion watchers call this the best-dressed convention in years.

Even on the convention floor, where one is braced for freaky exhibitionism, most of the men wear business suits and ties, and the greater number of the women look no different than the average New Yorker who is constantly exposed to the blessings of the Fashion Capitol of the World. The only flowered Hawaiian shirts were worn by the delegation from Guam, while Millie Kim from Honolulu stuck to a denim jacket and jeans, plus a flower lei.

More of an acid test was the "meet your favorite designer" breakfast at Bonwit Teller yesterday, where the conventioneers came under the expert eye of professional Seventh Avenue.

Viewing the sea of 500 women who were sipping champagne with strawberries and eating croissants, Bill Blass remarked: "They look like nice conservative American ladies. They look rather more like Republicans than Democrats."

Mollie Parnis agreed. "I'm agreeably surprised at how well they look. And they're interested in fashion, they're been asking me about skirt lengths and colors for fall."

"They're reasonably well-dressed in a solid way," contributed Kenneth Jay Lane. "They know where their heads are at this convention."

Donald Brooks was pleased that there were more dresses than pants. Giorgio di Sant'Angelo, who is considered an avant-gardist, approved completely: "They look very good. They're very relaxed, not overdressed."

Pauline Trigère, Donna Karan and a number of other rag-trade luminaries were on hand to give advice. But several women mentioned they loved Diane von Furstenberg's dresses and regretted she wasn't on tap to help them choose which dress. (Miss von Furstenberg had been in

For Mark Cross, Old-World Charm In a New Setting

By ENID NEMY

Some years ago, a prominent Washingtonian ordered a $14,000 matched set of crocodile luggage from Mark Cross. Before the commission was completed, he asked that plastic covers be made for the cases. His request was unequivocally refused. "I couldn't do it," said Edward Wasserberger, the president of Mark Cross, and standard-bearer of taste and design.

The customer settled for fabric covers, although Mr. Wasserberger still doesn't approve of any cover on beautiful luggage.

The new Mark Cross store, opened this week in the Olympic Tower building (645 Fifth Avenue), reflects both Mr. Wasserberger's taste, and that of his brother, George, who is executive vice president and the man in charge of interior design and décor.

"I've felt for a long time that the public was tired of chrome and steel," George Wasserberger said. "I wanted to go back to the Mark Cross roots."

For VIP's the roots reach back to 1845, but the Wasserberger brothers compromised on the Edwardian period, when the store entered its most famous era. Their architect, Ernest Castro, visited the Victoria and Albert Museum in London and, as a result of his research, the new emporium is a blend of Carpathian elm, much of it embellished with a lyre design, a continental cage-type elevator, now mirrored but soon to be see-through glass, and Art Nouveau stained-glass skylight effects.

There are also a 40-foot-high open gallery, the basis of the light and airy second floor, a blue, gray and white color scheme, and a very important Customer sanctuary, adorned with a picture of the store's founder.

As Mark Cross leaves behind the location at 707 Fifth Avenue, which is now only partly rented to new tenants, Kinbe Optic, what's to be had in the elegant new quarters? The Wasserbergers like to think there is something for everyone, and there probably is.

gold paperclip, shaped like a clothespin.

Also modestly priced is a new pair of implements for the bar. A champagne cork opener, in bamboo and stainless steel, is $28, as is a matching pair of ice tongs on a spring.

Women who complain they can never think of anything, or find something suitable, for husband or male friend, might take a look at the $45 reversible belts in such colors as red and navy or gray and black. One twist of the gold-color buckle and voilà, the belt can be worn on the reversible side. Another version of the same principle is designed for both sexes and is $35.

If money's no object, there's luggage as soft, and almost as light, as a whisper. It's made of lambskin with a goat trim, comes in red, brown, black and gold, and if the $300 to $410 price tags on each case mean that one would not be able to afford to put anything in them, it's almost worth it.

Then there's a desk set in leather, trimmed with sterling silver. The desk pad and letter tray are $350 each, the pencil cup is an even $100, and the whole thing is so luxurious, it might even revive letter-writing.

Unreal And Real
There is also no dearth of enticement specifically for women. A briefcase-sized lizard handbag, that could probably carry the contents of a small desk, is on hand for $750, and a calfskin replica is $450. There are a number of real briefcases for women, some that could double as handbags and others with twin handles. The prices go from $110 to $225.

bag, zippered at the top and bisected with Mark Cross imprinted straps. The leather is beautifully soft and the color choice is going to be a wide one, including some what difficult to find gray. The price will be about $130.

If one wearies of making selections, there's a tufted banquet type of seating, in a raspberry-ice shade, where one may not only sit, but drink tea. And if trying to balance the checkbook brings on a headache, the Wasserbergers have looked after that too. They have a couple of small and attractive pill boxes. The extra check for them will come to between $12 and $16.

the store earlier this week and had been asked for her autograph, just like a movie star.)

Typical of the neatly turned-out women at the breakfast was Jimmy Carter's sister, Ruth Stapleton, who was discussing politics rather than shoes with David Ewins, the designer. Mrs. Stapleton's white-dotted yellow jersey came from the Capitol Department Store in Fayetteville, N.C. If it had a designer's label, she didn't know it. It was a comfortable, shirt-waisty dress with long sleeves, and perfect for whatever weather New York might turn on.

Following Trends
Without their badges, one is hard put to tell the visitors from the locals. Skirts are possibly shorter than Seventh Avenue decrees, but middle America has caught on to trends.

Take the two young blondes sipping coffee, wearing the current New York uniforms: Jan Anderson in a T-shirt and wrap-around flowered cotton skirt, Bonnie Porter in a blue Jersey jumpsuit. Had they bought them here? No—Mrs. Anderson, wife of a delegate, and Miss Porter, a convention page, shop back home in Fargo, N.D. But they planned to do the stores on Friday for "something very New York," something you can't get in Fargo," Mrs. Anderson said. Whatever that may be.

A floor-length, T-shirt dress in red and white stripes, the sort of thing you might encounter in SoHo? Alicia Pichette, wife of a Montana delegation staffer, bought it in Helena, and packed it because "I could wear it anywhere."

A tailored pants suit with a vest? Marjorie Asher, a delegate, bought it in Lexington, Ky. She had bought some boots, children's clothes and a blouse in Saks and Lord & Taylor and was anxious to get another whirl at local stores.

The attractive green pants suit on Judy Azarra, a Tennessee delegate, looked cool and comfortable on the crowded convention floor.

Mrs. Azarra had also managed to squeeze in some shopping, but the suit had come with her. "I have a woman who sews."

After the Bonwit breakfast, some of the women remained to shop. Shirley McDonald, an Alabama delegate whose husband is a state senator, was looking for dresses to wear under her new mink coat. She explained that her husband is a cotton farmer and that they live on a 2,000-acre farm in Huntsville. Wild mink apparently is plentiful around the farm and Mrs. McDonald bought skins from a trapper and was having them made into a coat by Bonwit's.

"Tired of Pants"
Now she needed dresses: "I'm tired of pants. My husband says I should show off my best point, my legs."

Another young woman who stayed to shop was Anne Miles of Colville, Wash., whose uncle is a delegate. Mrs. Miles was trying on an Ultrasuede dress by Mollie Parnis and a couple of black evening things by Halston.

"I like good things, even if they are expensive," she said. "I know I can wear them for five or ten years."

Mrs. Miles is 23, her husband drives a United Parcel's truck. How would he feel about footing the bill for the $325, caramel-colored Ultrasuede dress by Mollie Parnis? "Oh, I'll pay for it," she replied. How said she wore her husband's big decision.

Jimmy Carter's Three Sons— They're Smiling in Amy's Shade

By JUDY KLEMESRUD

Amy, Amy, Amy. So much has been written and said about Jimmy Carter's 8-year-old blond, freckle-faced daughter with the gap-toothed grin that many people are unaware that the Democratic Presidential nominee also has three sons.

They are Jack, Chip, 26, and Jeff, 23, and they are known collectively as "the boys" within the Carter organization. All three are married, and they and their wives have, for the most part, temporarily sacrificed their own activities and professions to work full time on the Carter campaign.

"I'm the only one who wants to move to Washington if Dad wins," Jeff said yesterday. "But I secretly think that the other two will go to Washington, too. They couldn't stand to stay away, especially if we were there for eight years."

During the convention, the sons' days have been jam-packed with interviews, engagements that their father couldn't attend, and once in a while a sightseeing trip in Manhattan. Yesterday, for example, Chip and his wife, Caron, managed to slip away for a buggy ride in Central Park.

"I'm a romantic," Chip explained. "So am I," his wife replied.

Here are brief sketches of the three Carter sons: John William (Jack) Carter. The oldest Carter son is a husky red-haired lawyer who practices with his father-in-law in Calhoun, Ga. But he has yet to try any cases because he has been too busy working for his father. An avid reader, Jack is described by Carter staffers as "the intellectual son." He and his wife, Judy, a schoolteacher, have an 11-month-old son, Jason James, who is Jimmy Carter's only grandchild.

James Earl (Chip) Carter 3d; Chip is the only Carter son who chose to remain in Plains. He is also the only other politician in the Carter family, having been elected to the City Council in Plains, a position he resigned when he decided to campaign full time for his father. A friendly, the Carter clan on the 21st floor of the Americana Hotel, dubbed "Plains North" because so many family members have deserted their tiny hometown to come to New York to see Mr. Carter get the Presidential nomination.

"The boys have been invaluable to Jimmy," said Sissy Dolvin, Mr. Carter's aunt. "They've traveled all over the country for him and filled in for him when he couldn't make an engagement. Their wives campaigned separately too, except for Annette, and that's because she's still newlywed. She's shy, so she campaigns with Jeff."

The sons are extremely loyal to their father; when asked if they thought he had any weaknesses, they could not think of one. "The only bad thing I can remember was one time when he was disciplining me and he called me in and said, 'We'll talk about this in 24 hours,'" Chip said. "Well, it was horrible waiting that long."

Jeff said he preferred the usual Carter discipline: Several swats with a peach switch had been committed. "But it was pretty rare that we'd ever get spanked," he said. The sons and their wives Donnel Jeffrey (Jeff) Carter. The shyest of the Carter sons, Jeff lives with his wife, Annette, in an apartment in Atlanta, where he studies city planning at Georgia State. He is described by Carter staffers as a loner and an avid reader, especially of science-fiction books. He strongly resembles the comedian David Brenner.

U.S. JUDGE LIMITS 'CLEAN AIR' PLAN

Parts of Federal Program Ruled Out for New York

By ARNOLD H. LUBASCH The Federal clean-air plan for New York City has been substantially curtailed by a Federal judge.

The plan provides for imposing tolls on East River and Harlem River bridges, banning taxis from cruising on several midtown streets, reducing parking space in the city's central business district to discourage cars from entering the area...

However, in Federal District Court in Manhattan, Judge Kevin Thomas Duffy issued a decision late Tuesday that strongly limited the responsibility of the city and state to enforce the plan, which was approved three years ago by the Federal Environmental Protection Agency.

Bridge Tolls Periled Judge Duffy did not specify the city could be compelled to precisely how far the plan could be enforced, but he indicated that it must be sharply curtailed in ways that could kill the plan against private vehicles.

Mayor Beame has described the plan as "a questionable set of strategies" that fail to consider "the city's current economic and fiscal condition."

Environmentalists who are seeking full enforcement of the plan said yesterday that they would appeal Judge Duffy's decision because "it emasculates the plan and creates yet more delays."

As a result of a suit that the environmentalists had filed, the United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit ruled last April 23 that the city and state must put the four key provisions of the plan into effect.

Acting on this notion, Judge Duffy has now ruled that the city and state can be compelled to enforce the plan "only to the extent that they are actual polluters" and not in their role as regulators of other polluters.

This means, for example, that the city could be compelled to enforce the plan with regard to city-owned vehicles, but that it could not be required to affirmative action to enforce the plan against private vehicles.

Judge Duffy said, however, that the plan against private vehicles might still be required to enforce the plan's provisions for eliminating parking space on streets in the business district because the city could be considered "an indirect source of pollution" by providing on-street parking that attracted cars into the area.

Plans for other cities to control traffic and combat pollution have been devised under the Federal Clean Air Act, but local opposition and court decisions have blocked or reduced plans in some areas, including Boston and Los Angeles.

Judge Duffy's 28-page decision did not specify what parts of the clean-air plan must be enforced, leaving it up to the environmentalists to work out a proposed order under the general guidelines set by the decision.

The proposed imposition of bridge tolls, Judge Duffy said, presented a "special set of problems" that would require him to hear additional arguments from the parties in the suit. He indicated that at least four of the 13 bridges could not charge tolls because they were built to some extent with Federal funds.

Regarding the plan's provisions to restrict taxi cruising and truck deliveries, the judge said that these sections also contained measures that "appear to be outside the scope of a proper order."

Alexander Gigante Jr., a lawyer for the city, said that "we were basically happy" with the judge's decision.

David Schoenbrod, a staff attorney for the Natural Resources Defense Council, said the environmentalists in the suit were "deeply disappointed."

"What the district court has done," he said, "is to let the state and the city off the hook on taking affirmative steps to manage the city's transportation system, which every New Yorker knows causes unhealthy air and costly traffic delays."

Witness Whose Car Was Seized by the Harrises Says He Never Feared They'd Kill Him

U.S. Suit Says 2 Serve as Agents

By MARCIA CHAMBERS
Special to The New York Times
LOS ANGELES, July 14—A prosecution witness, testifying in the first cross-examination conducted by William Harris, said today that while Mr. Harris and his wife, Emily, took his car at gunpoint in the name of Symbiase Liberation Army, he never thought the revolutionaries would kill him.

Mr. Pierre, seated in the witness box on which the prosecutor had placed the two automatic carbines the Harrises used that day, told the jury his car was found soon after it was taken.

The Harrises, on trial for assault, robbery and kidnapping, conceded at their trial that they had commandeered cars and people in their flight with Patricia Harris, of the newspaper family, after Miss Hearst fired shots at a sporting goods store where the Harrises fought arrest as shoplifting suspects.

The defense, virtually conceding the facts in this case, has labeled these actions "harrowing." The state calls them robbery and kidnapping.

Aware that the law says a prosecutor must show that the robbers intended to "permanently deprive" an owner of his property, Mr. Harris asked Mr. Pierre when his car was found.

"That day," said Mr. Pierre,

Samuel Mayerson, the chief prosecutor, quickly established on re-direct examination that the reason Mr. Pierre's car was found that day only several blocks away was probably that the car had a bad carburetor.

No Promise of Return

"When he showed you the gun and you got out of your car, did Mrs. Harris say he would return it to you?" Mr. Mayerson asked.

"No, he didn't," Mr. Pierre replied.

Mr. Mayerson, who had trouble eliciting from Mr. Pierre that he felt any fear when the Harrises took his car at gunpoint, had better luck with the next witness, Thomas Patin Sr., who turned over his car at gunpoint to the Harrises when Mr. Pierre's stopped running.

Mr. Patin told the jury that he gave Mr. Harris the keys to his 1963 station wagon "because I was scared and afraid of getting my stomach blown to bits."

But minutes later Mr. Patin startled the prosecutor when he disclosed that Mr. Harris promised to drop the car where Mr. Patin could recover it.

"Did you ever tell anyone this before?" Mr. Mayerson asked.

Mr. Patin's son, Thomas, identified the third member of the group as Miss Hearst, who, he said, wore a black wig. She was pale and quiet and carried a carbine when she entered the Patin's car, he said.

Earlier, Mr. Pierre testified under direct examination that after he got out of his car, he saw the armed man walk several yards away cursing that he would kill another person.

The Harrises and Miss Hearst had been pursued from the sporting goods store by Anthony E. Shepard, a clerk, who had managed to get one handgun on Mr. Harris and help take his gun away when Miss Hearst snatched two automatic guns at the store.

Mr. Shepard, who often speaks in police jargon, said he halted his automobile pursuit of the trio when he saw a person carrying a weapon, starting down the hill toward him. He said he could not identify the person, even as to sex.

Says Shots Surprised Harris

Mr. Shepard's testimony helped convince Miss Hearst's Federal jury that she was a willing convert to the Symbiase Liberation Army and a voluntary bank robber. At her San Francisco trial earlier this year, Mr. Shepard said Miss Hearst could have been the armed person who menaced him so that he broke off attempts to follow as the trio shifted to the Pierre car.

The 22-year-old clerk, who engaged in occasional repartee with Leonard Weinglass, Mrs. Harris's lawyer, in cross-examination in the morning session, blurted out at one point that Mr. Harris seemed surprised when the firing began at the store.

Mr. Shepard testified, over prosecution objections, that when the bullets started flying while he and Mr. Harris were scuffling, Mr. Harris told him: "Get out of here."

"It was the tone of voice," Mr. Shepard said, "as if he didn't know what was happening."

Mr. Harris, seated at the defense table, smiled.

The Harrises and Miss Hearst are charged with assault with a deadly weapon against six persons at the store, including Mr. Shepard, even though the Harrises never fired a shot.

The defense contends that the Harrises never had advance warning that Miss Hearst, who was kidnapped by the Symbiase group three months before the sporting goods incident, would open fire. They say they should not be deemed accomplices to her action.

At her trial, Miss Hearst said that her shooting was "automatic" but that she had been trained for just such a situation.

Miss Hearst is not on trial with the Harrises because she is awaiting sentencing on her bank robbery conviction.

Bridge: Some Players Experiment With 3-Card Major Suit Bid

By ALAN TRUSCOTT

Beginners soon learn that they can bid a three-card minor suit when circumstances so dictate, but three-card majors are quite another matter.

Experiments in this area have been tried around the world by some highly imaginative players: Pierre Jais and Roger Trézel in France; the late Adam Meredith in England; and Martin Cohn of Birmingham, Ala.

One of Cohn's regular partners carried this trend rather farther on the diagrammed deal, which helped him to win a recent masters team title in a Michigan State sectional tournament.

Albert Silber of Southfield, Mich., held the South cards, and had to decide on a rebid after he opened one diamond and heard a one-spade response. The popular choice would be three diamonds, but some would select two clubs or a highly-conservative two diamonds.

In a frivolous mood, Silber rejected all these normal choices and announced "two hearts." He thought this might serve to prevent a heart lead if the partnership reached three no-trump, and there seemed little risk since this reverse bid was forcing in the partnership style.

However, this calculation did not allow for the possibility that North would show wild enthusiasm for hearts. Blackwood made a sudden appearance on the scene, and when Silber resisted the temptation to bid a little about his aces and kings, he found himself in six hearts.

His experimental bid with a doubleton seemed to have brought about disaster, but he felt a little better when West led a club and the dummy appeared. Prospects were not good, but at least six hearts was better than the other possible slams.

The club lead was won with the ace in dummy and a spade was led to the king. Dummy's club losers were discarded on the ace and king of diamonds, and the diamond ten was led. It did not seem right to West cover this with the queen, since his partner might have begun with J-7-3. So West played low, and that proved a fatal error that allowed the slam to succeed.

South discarded a spade from the dummy, and when the diamond ten was ruffed low in dummy, the spade ace was cashed, and a spade was ruffed low. Another club was ruffed, and dummy's last spade was ruffed with the heart ace. Dummy still had a Q-J-10 of hearts with which to score two of the last three tricks and bring home the slam.

Chess: Interzonal Tourney Starts With an Indecisive Nonbang

Social to The New York Times
BIEL, Switzerland, July 13—In the first round of the Interzonal Tournament being played here to select candidates for a world championship challenge, only two games finished decisively. A former world champion, Tigran Petrosian of the Soviet Union, picked up a point when Raul Sanguinetti of Argentina went astray in a queen-and-pawn ending and lost two pawns, and Oscar Castro of Colombia defeated an exchange sacrifice by Andre Lombard of Switzerland to win on the black side of a Gruenfeld Defense.

Books of The Times

In the Country of Books

By RICHARD R. LINGEMAN

THE VERY RICH HOURS OF ADRIENNE MONNIER. Translated by Richard McDougall. Illustrated, 336 pages. Charles Scribner's Sons, $14.95.

In 1915, with little experience and only a love of literature to commend her, a young Frenchwoman named Adrienne Monnier opened a bookshop on Paris's Rue de la Harpe. The shop, which subsequently acquired the happy name of Maison des Amis des Livres—house of the friends of books—along with Sylvia Beach's Shakespeare Company, a center of Paris's literary life between the wars.

Richard McDougall, the translator of this selection of Miss Monnier's memories and her writings, calls this area on the Left Bank the country of Odessa—the country of the spirit that is embodied and disseminated by books. Miss Beach's shop was across the street, featured books in English, while Miss Monnier's daily work was by French authors. When they played host to just about everyone of importance in Paris's literary world of the 1920's and '30's, publishing by their personal recommendations all the best authors of the day. The two shops did more than merely sell books; they also served as salons, clubs, literary social centers and centers for discussion.

Sisters in Spirit

Two women had their fingers on the literary pulse; they encouraged talents and even published them—namely Joyce's "Ulysses," which Miss Beach aggressively published in English after its rejection in America, and Miss Monnier in French. Inevitably they were close friends, in spirit and, Mr. McDougall theorizes with some justice though no direct evidence, lovers in the physical sense as well. "Discretion" was a favorite word of Miss Monnier, and, in a time when sexual attitudes spilled over into her portraits of writer-friends, which are animated with a charity that borders on piety but, fortunately, is leavened by a sly, mischievous sense of the eccentricities and poses of the literary profession. Many of the figures she describes will seem obscure to American readers, although Mr. McDougall's notes help. Still, there are sharp-eyed descriptions in plentitude of T. S. Eliot she says, "His face is handsome and curious; that of an archangel who has too much to do, and so does only half of it, leaving the rest to the North Wind". There is a spirited account of a luncheon with Colette, after which, over coffee, Miss Monnier reads the novelist's palm and tells her, "You have the thumb of a pirate chief," to which Colette replies: "It's true, I'm terribly violent. I've often had the urge to kill. I love knives, blades, not revolvers—they make an absurd noise—no, a silent blade with a fine taper."

Miss Monnier's literary criticism is often astute—as in her analysis of "Ulysses" for French readers, although, again, her religiosity obscures and overworks the spiritual front, out of a need to justify Joyce's preoccupation with profane reality. Through all these essays runs a serenity and wisdom, as well as a relaxed appreciation and tolerance of life's diverse manifestations. Above all, there is an unquenchable love for books—"Before books disappear, humankind will disappear. In an essay on women's reading she summons up a St. Wiborada, whom she says was known as "patroness of bibliophiles." Once when a horde of Hungarian barbarians threatened a monastery, St. Wiborada called to the monks: "Save the books first! Hide them! You can see to the sacred vessels afterward!" Obviously Adrienne Monnier approved of the saint's sense of priorities.

treated with the same friendliness. She would chat with them to learn what their tastes were and advised countless serious booklovers on which novelists and poets they should read.

Her literary idealism extended to various projects such as the "Ulysses" translation and the publication of a literary magazine called Navire d'Argent (Silver Ship, i.e., Paris), which lasted a year. Such projects as those insured that she would never make a lot of money from her shop; still, one suspects she was a good businesswoman, and the store survived into the 1950's, when ill health forced her to sell it.

One would like to know a bit more about the kinds of books she stocked, although apparently her lofty standards did not exclude current best sellers, and one essay shows what a shrewd knowledge she had of the French reading public. All the same, she ran a highly personal bookshop that catered to "the happy few"—the serious lovers of literature. She had few illusions about the size of this discriminating public, and in an essay called "A Letter to a Young Poet" she says it was "an error to believe that the world owes something to poets; what it owed them it has given them in bestowing inspiration upon them," adding that the poet should be a mystic because "he will then be able, almost as much as a saint, to do without the approbation of the world."

A Blade for Colette

The persistent religiosity of her literary attitudes spills over into her portraits of writer-friends, which are animated with a charity that borders on piety but, fortunately, is leavened by a sly, mischievous sense of the eccentricities and poses of the literary profession. Many of the figures she describes will seem obscure to American readers, although Mr. McDougall's notes help. Still, there are sharp-eyed descriptions in plentitude of T. S. PLANNERS REDUCE LANDMARK ZONING

Villard Site Is Still Eligible for High-Rise Easement

The City Planning Commission yesterday sharply limited the scope of a zoning proposal that governs the way in which developers may include landmarks in new high-rise buildings.

Victor Marrero, the commission chairman, announced that under the revised proposal "about three or four sites" in Community Planning District 5 would be eligible, instead of the 55 sites under the original proposal.

Among the sites that would still be affected in the district, which covers Manhattan's east side, is that of the Villard Houses, the five brownstones on Madison Avenue between 50th and 51st Streets owned by the Archdiocese of New York and now rented to the developer Harry Helmsley. Mr. Helmsley is seeking permission to build a 51-story luxury hotel behind the houses which were declared a landmark in 1968.

The limited landmark zoning proposal, as in its original form, would allow Mr. Helmsley and other affected developers building high-rises adjacent to landmark sites to count some of the floor space of the landmark as plaza area, enabling them to waive a portion of the required plaza space mandated for high-rise buildings.

Artists at Hearing

The Planning Commission yesterday also heard testimony from artists and other residents of the SoHo and NoHo communities who are seeking to slow commercial development in their area of lower Manhattan.

The commission has proposed a zoning rule that would bar food and recreation establishments with floor space exceeding 5,000 square feet from the two communities, which are north and south of Houston Street. But some residents who spoke at the public meeting said they did not feel the proposed rule went far enough.

They told of artists who had been forced to move out of their lofts on the west side of the city because of the noise and loss of the general election in November.

8th Street Cited

"I lived in the 'Village' a long time before I moved to SoHo," Francis Jennings, a sculptor, testified "and I know what the deterioration of Eighth Street has become and how it became that way."

When Vincent J. Montalbano, a candidate for the Assembly in the 62d Assembly District, was testifying in favor of the zoning restriction proposal, Gordon Davis, a member of the Planning Commission, asked him whether he thought that activity such as the recent loft jazz concerts held in SoHo should also be banned.

Mr. Montalbano did not answer the question, but the audience in the Board of Estimate chambers, where the hearings were held, answered with shouts of "Yes!" and "No!" each equally strong.

Carter Thanks Georgians

Jimmy Carter thanked Georgia convention delegates yesterday for their support behind "not many people thought I had a chance" to be Democratic Presidential nominee, United Press International reported. Hours before his assured nomination, Mr. Carter told his home state's delegates that he did "not intend" to escape discomfiture and loss of the general election in November.

Mr. Cohen has been executive vice president of Arno Press since he joined it in May 1972. Arno Press, which the Times Company purchased in 1968, publishes reprints of scholarly and historical works, primarily for sale to libraries. It is one of the library and general book companies under the direction of Arnold Zohn, who was recently named a vice president of the Times Company and who was Mr. Cohen's predecessor as president of Arno Press.

Herbert Cohen

Mr. Cohen came to Arno Press from the Xerox Corporation's American Education Publications in Middletown, Conn. He was graduated from the Baruch School of the City College of New York in 1956 with a B.B.A. degree. He lives in Rye, N.Y., with his wife and three children.

A Petition for Seat Belts On School Buses Denied

WASHINGTON, July 14 (AP)—The National Highway Transportation Safety Board has denied a petition by the New Jersey-based Physicians for Automobile Safety to require seat belts in school buses.

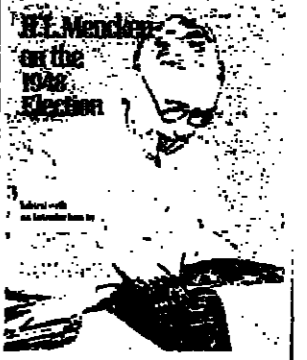

The Federal agency said yesterday that its studies on the need for seat belts in school buses contained contradictory results and that it would require their use until further tests were completed.

A spokesman for the doctors' group, Dr. Arthur Yeager of Woodcliff Lake, said the ruling "was not surprising but certainly disappointing."

Dr. Yeager, a Bergen County dentist, said his group would continue to press the New Jersey Legislature and the State Board of Education to require seat belts and other bus safety features.

Buildings From 1876 Centennial Live On in Spring Lake, N.J.

By FRANK J. PREAL
Special to The New York Times
SPRING LAKE, N.J.—The Billows Hotel on Atlantic Avenue is one. So is the Missouri House over near Wreck Pond.

From May to November 1876 on 236 acres in Fairmount Park, 49 nations and 26 states displayed their works to 10 million visitors.

looking for bargains. They were not disappointed.

Several dozen buildings were moved from the exposition grounds to the New Jersey Shore.

On Dec. 2, 1876, in an article the day after the auction, The New York Times reported that "The neat little building known as the Medical Department, which spanned the creek in the ravine back of the judges' hall, was sold to Mr. Henry Yard of Ocean Beach, N.J., who intends to remove it to the new summer resort."

Ocean Beach is now the Town of Belmar about 30 miles south of New York. The "neat little building" became the second floor of the Brunswick Hotel, a landmark in the area.

The Globe actually stood outside the Centennial grounds. It was made to be knocked down easily when the exposition closed.

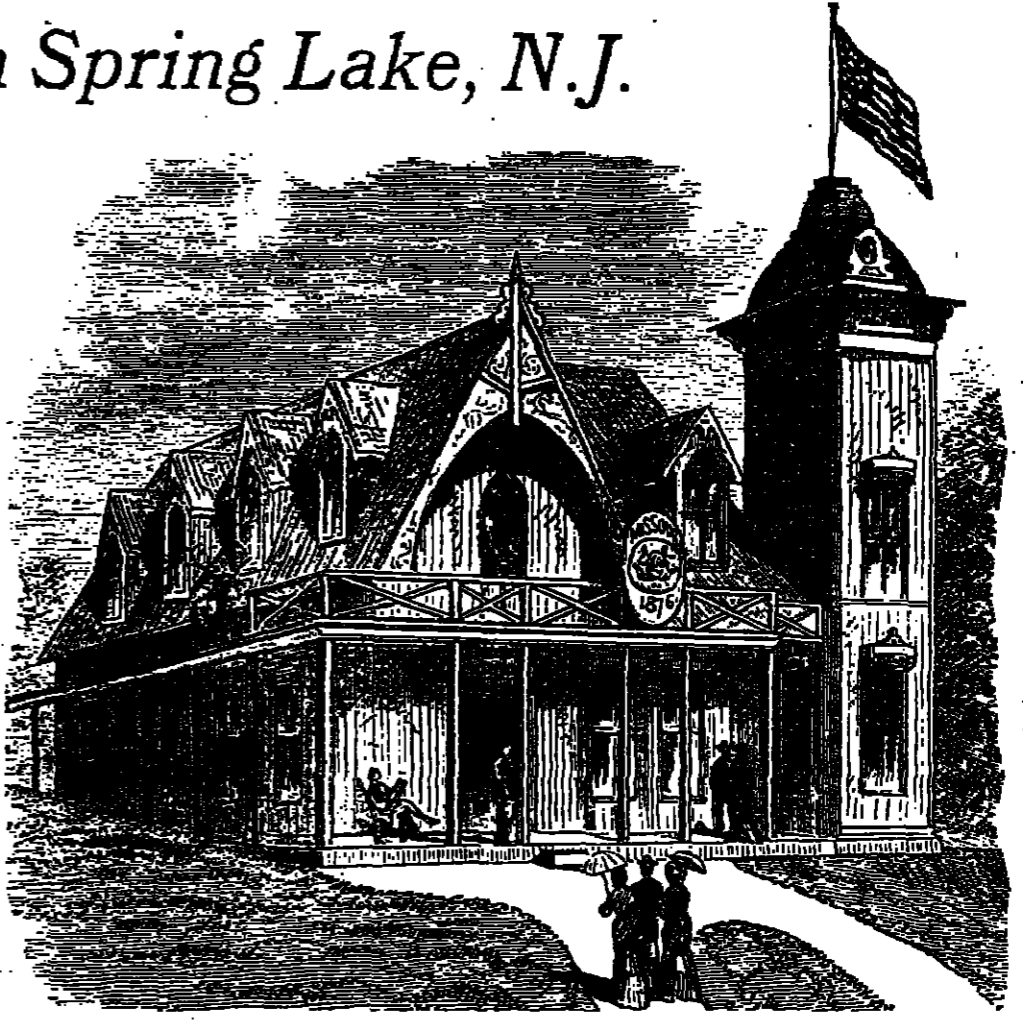

A Survivor

The Missouri House, on Pennsylvania Avenue, is one of the few known survivors among the state buildings at the Centennial Exposition.

The building was purchased by a Charles Dillingham of Brooklyn for $600 and transported to Spring Lake by flat car.

A few yards away was the New Hampshire House. While the Missouri House has been a hotel or rooming house for many years—with many owners—the New Hampshire House was a private home.

hands—and names—often, originally was the Portuguese Government pavilion at the Exposition. It has been altered and expanded so many times over the years that an effort is required to detect the original, delicate, gazebo-like lines of the Portuguese building.

The Portuguese building was never supposed to come to Spring Lake. It was purchased at the auction by a Methodist minister. He intended to set it up in Ocean Grove, which was just getting started in 1876 as a God-fearing community where the pious could flee the sinful excesses of Asbury Park, the next town to the north.

The minister could find no room for his building in Ocean Grove. He sold it to someone who put it up in Spring Lake instead.

Restoration Work
Conservators on the Metropolitan's staff and Egyptian experts have been doing some restoration work here and there to prepare the objects for their long journey.

International Sensation
"I'm not worried about the curse; my mother is worried but I'm not," he declared.

The objects are to range from facsimiles of Pharaonic jewelry to a cushion in the shape of a mummy.

Security is a consideration in transportation plans, because the total market value of the objects is well into the millions of dollars.

Mr. Logan, a New Jersey lawyer who is a doctoral candidate in Egyptology at the University of Chicago, scoffed in an interview at the decades-old rumors of an ancient deadly curse on violators of King Tutankhamen's tomb.

Mr. Logan, the curator of the Metropolitan's department of Egyptian art, visited Cairo last year to choose the 55 objects—which constitute only a fraction of the Egyptian Museum's total collection of 200,000 objects and of the many objects that were found and taken out of the royal tomb.

Mr. Logan, a senior research associate on the Metropolitan staff, has been drawing up condition reports on the objects in collaboration with Egyptian Museum curators.

Since the discovery of objects from the tomb, only rarely been sent abroad, and the forthcoming exhibition in the United States is expected to generate large crowds of the modern objects that will be on sale to the crowds.

Painter Is Accused Of Smashing Panes Over an Unpaid Bill

MINEOLA, L. I., July 14—A house painter, angered when the owner of a $110,000 home in Manhasset allegedly refused to pay the balance of his bill, was arrested yesterday for smashing 82 panes of glass in the house.

When Mr. Rammos asked the owner, Mary Jane Kohnken, for the $325 balance, she reportedly refused payment because she thought the job had not been completed.

At that point, according to the police, the painter picked up a hammer and methodically made his way around the house, smashing 82 panes in nine large windows on the first floor.

Mrs. Kohnken said the broken panes were being replaced today, but she did not know the cost. The police estimated the damage at $720.

Asked whether the house painter could return later to finish the job to her satisfaction, Mrs. Kohnken replied, "I don't want to see him here ever."

Seven Ex-Pressmen Are Indicted Over Washington Post Damage

By BEN A. FRANKLIN

WASHINGTON, July 14—A grand jury indicted seven former pressmen at the Washington Post today on charges of rioting, inciting a riot, malicious destruction, theft and assault.

The charges stemmed from a press room rampage that briefly interrupted publication of the newspaper last October at the outbreak of a walkout by the pressmen's union.

The six-count indictment came at the end of nine months of intermittent grand jury sessions and the testimony of 115 persons, including many of the striking pressmen.

A spokesman for Local 6 of the Newspaper and Graphic Communications Union, which formerly represented the Post pressmen, said that neither the union nor the individuals named in the indictment would comment today.

The pressmen charged with rioting, inciting a riot and destruction of property were Eugene E. O'Sullivan, Cecil E. Rust, Gil W. Fowler, Lawrence H. Boyd, Fred F. Tweedie, Michael Tenorio and Walter J. Stahl.

In addition, all but Mr. Fowler and Mr. Boyd were charged with grand larceny in the theft of vital press parts.

The maximum penalties for the charges are 10 years and $5,000 for rioting, 10 years and $10,000 for grand larceny, 10 years and $500 for simple assault, one year and $500 for grand larceny, 10 years.

Service Groups in Dispute. On World Food Problems

WASHINGTON, July 14 (UPI)—Two of the nation's most respected service organizations are publicly quarreling over how the United States should respond to the world hunger crisis.

What bothers Bread for the World in particular, is the fact that the Environmental Fund statement was signed by Zbigniew Brzezinski, a foreign policy adviser to Jimmy Carter.

ENNIS OLGIATI, 46, LED PAROLE UNIT

Also Sought Improvement of Pretrial Procedures

Ennis J. Olgati, chairman of the New York State Board of Parole, died of cancer yesterday at his home at 135 West 10th Street. He was 46 years old.

Much of his career was devoted to improving pretrial court procedures to achieve a faster and more efficient handling of cases awaiting trial.

Mr. Olgati was appointed to the parole board last December by Governor Carey.

Earlier, Mr. Olgati had been assistant director of the Manhattan Court Employment Project of the Vera Institute of Justice.

He joined the Army before earning a bachelor's degree at City College. After earning a degree he re-enlisted. As an officer, he represented enlisted men before special courts-martial.

Mr. Olgati then joined the New York City Department of Social Services as a job developer. In 1958 he was made a parole officer here and was advanced to supervisor of parole and assistant director of an experimental program for releasing youths from New York State reformatory.

He was a director of the National Association of Pre-trial Service Agencies.

WOMAN IS EXCUSED FROM RESTITUTION

TRENTON, July 14 (UPI)—The New Jersey Supreme Court yesterday upheld restitution as part of a probation sentence, but said that sentencing judges must keep in mind the plight of the offender as well as the offense involved.

The state's highest court upheld a ruling that excused Barbara Ann Harris from making restitution for money she allegedly received illegally from the Bergen County Welfare Board.

The woman, who has five children, pleaded with the trial court for leniency, she also questioned the amount of money in dispute.

"The only thing I wanted to do was to see a smile on my children's faces," she told the sentencing judge.

In yesterday's decision, the court said that restitution was required for two factors—guilt and the need for the rehabilitation process.

Ronald Tree, Confidant of U.S. And British Leaders, Dies at 78

Collins was persuaded to accompany Mr. Churchill back to Downing Street on Mondays and for almost half a century an intimate of the men and women who shaped American and British history, died in London yesterday after a brief illness. He was 78 years old.

Arthur Ronald Lambert Tree was born in Eastbourne, England, of American parents and throughout his life maintained close relations with the country of his parents' birth.

But he remained a British subject himself. He was always sensitive to Britain's difficulties, particularly in a naval and air force.

Mr. Tree continued to live at Ditchley but he had lost his seat in Parliament in the post-war Labor Party sweep and was beginning to feel the pinch of the taxes levied on the landed gentry by the new government.

Mr. Tree moved to Barbados, where they lived at an estate called Heron Bay that he had designed himself in the same Palladian style as his beloved Ditchley.

In recent years, the Trees divided their time between Heron Bay and their town house in Manhattan, which was filled with furniture and art from Ditchley Park and which was known among their friends as Little Ditchley.

In New York, in Barbados and in London, Mr. Tree's friends and associates were the famous and powerful. He called Anthony Eden "Tony," he called Winston Churchill "Winston."

Mr. Tree's success as a meeting place for Collins and the other guests suggested that he might go much better if he were in London.

Ballet: Potential of Yoko Murishita

BY CLIVE BARNES

The Japanese dancer Yoko Murishita might be regarded as something of a problem...

From the audience point of view — which is solely my point of view — she is a fascinating demonstration of the difference between the quite extraordinarily good dancer and the simply great dancer.

The program also included Agnes de Mille's "Fall River Legend," Twyla Tharp's "Push Comes to Shove," and Jerome Robbins's totally magical duet for Miss Makarova and Mikhail Baryshnikov.

All have been already reviewed, but looking again at the sheer magic of "Other Dances," I found myself inspired to an aspiration.

It is a full evening. It includes "Dances at a Gathering," "In the Night," and "Other Dances."

It is not my intention for the next to discourage the most talented Miss Morishita, but, I believe, it is my duty to say what she does not do.

Government, where it belongs," a source within the I.O.C.'s 78-member board of directors said tonight.

Henry Hsu, an I.O.C. director from Taiwan, said his country now had a "five-member team" here.

"We can have a team and join the competition," he said. "We came to take part, not necessarily to win anything. And these five people came into the country legally."

The Taiwanese proposal will be relayed by the I.O.C. to Prime Minister Trudeau's Government through the Canadian Olympic Organizing Committee. That committee, called COJO, reportedly is backing the effort fully.

The I.O.C. made no official statement tonight when it adjourned at 8 P.M. after five hours of deliberation. The seriousness of the confrontation was underscored earlier in the day when the I.O.C. first delayed and then canceled its morning session. While the full membership stood by, the organization's nine-member executive committee conferred with Taiwanese and American officials, among others.

Just before the adjournment, a nonvoting I.O.C. spokesman, Monique Berthoin, confirmed that the I.O.C. was "trying hard" to have the accredited Taiwanese take part in the Games.

Ironically, the latest and potentially gravest threat to the Games developed the day after the flame for the 21st Olympiad was lighted by the rays of the sun on the steps of a temple in Ancient Olympia, Greece. After being carried by 550 relay runners to Athens, it will be transmitted almost instantaneously by satellite tomorrow to Ottawa. Thus, it will arrive in the Canadian capital for relay to Olympic Stadium in Montreal on the same day as the I.O.C. request on Taiwan.

Philip Krumm, president of the United States Olympic Committee, confirmed later that an American pullout was "under consideration." However, he said no decision would be made for 24 hours. A majority of the American athletes has arrived at Olympic Village.

Krumm, in seclusion at his hotel most of the day, conferred at least three times with aides of President Ford in Washington. However, the President has no authority over the country's Olympic delegation.

A compromise plan proposed by the I.O.C., headed by Lord Killanin, would have permitted the entire Taiwanese team to compete under the Olympic flag and use the Olympic hymn as an anthem.

Taiwan, recognized by the I.O.C. as the Republic of China, rejected the compromise. It has argued that this is the first time in Olympic history that athletes have been prevented from entering a country to compete.

The yachtsmen have been in the country two weeks. During that time, they have worn their plastic identification dog tags at the main Olympic Village and the yachting center in Kingston, Ontario, 180 miles to the southwest of Lake Ontario.

"These people must be allowed to compete," a source close to the negotiations said.

"The I.O.C. must stand by its rules. If Canada wants to keep them out, it will have to physically eject them."

The accredited group includes only three actual competitors: Kui Lim and his younger brother Yai, who are scheduled to sail in the 470 Class of the Olympic yachting competition, and Thomas Hsueh, the 40-year-old sailing captain and alternate crewman.

Kui Lim, the skipper, is 20 and his brother 19. The other two members who come under the broad definition of "athlete" are Lin Foo, 42, the sailing coach, and Ling Won, the team's woman meteorologist.

"We're just sitting here waiting," Hsueh said at the Queen Elizabeth Hotel, where the I.O.C. stays and holds its major meetings. "Nobody has told us not to wait. All I know is, we're fully accredited and we want to participate all the way."

Hsueh declined comment on the latest Taiwanese strategy, saying only that "we're not pulling out of the Games." The maneuver is being directed by Henry Hsu, an I.O.C. director; Shen Chi-min, president of the Republic of China Olympic Committee; and Lawrence S. Ting, vice president of the committee and chief of the Taiwanese delegation.

"My own feeling," said Hsu, "is that we have to stay in the Games according to the rules. If your name is John Jones and you get an invitation to a party under the name of Bill Smith, would you go to the party? The rules say we should parade under the name designated by the I.O.C. That name is Republic of China."

The threat of an American pullout, remote as it might turn out to be, apparently was influencing the I.O.C. deliberations. In the event the United States went home, ABC-TV would be contractually entitled to cancel its multimillion-dollar obligation.

The network paid more than $25 million for rights to televise the Games. Loss of its share of that revenue would leave the I.O.C. virtually bankrupt.

today, and it was suggested that they should vote and that those who wanted more time should vote later. The group, however, decided unanimously to give itself until 2 P.M. Monday.

Commissioner Kuhn and some of the owners in favor of the agreement were said to be eager to have it ratified today for political reasons. Kuhn is scheduled to testify before the Special House Committee on Professional Sports next Wednesday, and the indication was that he wanted to be able to go to Washington and report that

Baseball Owners Postpone Vote on Pact Until Monday

By MURRAY CHASS
Special to The New York Times

PHILADELPHIA, July 14—Loud but only minimal opposition emerged today as baseball's club owners were briefed on the new four-year agreement with their players.

The owners, however, postponed a vote to approve the pact so they could have more time to study its complex terms.

The owners must cast their votes by teletype to Commissioner Bowie Kuhn's office in New York by 2 P.M. next Monday. When that vote is totaled, perhaps only two clubs—the Oakland A's and St. Louis Cardinals — will have rejected the agreement.

Thirteen votes, including at least five in each 12-team league, are needed for ratification of the pact, which will enable players to become free agents after six years in the majors and allow them to demand a trade after five years.

The 600 players, who need 301 votes, are expected to ratify the agreement overwhelmingly by the end of next week.

The New York Mets and Baltimore Orioles previously were reported to have been against the deal, but they apparently are ready to ratify it. In fact, M. Donald Grant, chairman of the Mets' board, was disturbed that he had been pictured as opposing the agreement, which was reached after 13 months and 50 negotiating sessions.

"I wasn't opposed to it," Grant said. "I didn't understand it. I didn't know what it was. The number of clubs

Lockhart Retires; Giant for 11 Years

By GERALD ESKENAZI

Spider Lockhart completed his version of "Only in America" yesterday by retiring from the New York Giants after 11 seasons and driving off in his white Jaguar to Bache & Company, stockbroker.

The sinewy defensive back, who had played in the Pro Bowl twice and was a starter the first time he stepped on the field, said he had made the decision after a sleepless night and after passing his physical examination for the season.

"Can I still play football?" he said. "That's not the point."

He explained that it was time to move on, to Bache's institutional sales department especially.

Meanwhile, in Los Angeles, the Jets' defensive back Steve Tannen quit and immediately met with his theatrical agent to audition for acting jobs. Tannen had been traded from the Jets to the Oakland Raiders, but on Tuesday he heeded his Oakland

Rowing Hopes Choppy, Yachting Bright

Eights Favored

By WILLIAM N. WALLACE

Rowing is one of the best run of all the United States Olympic sports, having contented coaches and competitors. Contentment, however, gives no assurance of success because the fabulous East German program dominates the sport on the international level (10 firsts in 14 events at the 1975 world championships).

With the addition of six women's events to the Olympic program for the first time, the rowing contingent of 62 athletes is now the second largest after track and

These Reds Appeal to the President

PHILADELPHIA, July 14—In his miniature Cincinnati Reds uniform with "14" and "Rose" on the back, 8-year-old Pete Rose Jr. was twirling a bat near his father's locker in the National League clubhouse after the All-Star Game when somebody asked him what he thought of the American League team.

"They're good," he said, "but the Reds always win."

From the mouths of babes. Any confusion between the Reds and the National League All-Stars is understandable. In the 7-1 victory Tuesday night under the gaze of President Ford, members of the world champion Reds drove in four runs, scored four and produced seven of the National League's 10 hits. Pete Rose's leadoff single sparked a two-run first inning. George Foster's two-run homer put the National League in command, 4-0, in the third. Ken Griffey's two-out run-scoring single enabled Cesar Cedeño, an intruder from the Houston Astros, to add a two-run homer in the eighth.

And so the National League, alias the Cincinnati Reds, won the All-Star Game for the fifth consecutive year and the 13th time in the last 14 games. It's not an accident.

"You go down the rosters," Pete Rose was saying, "and when you get to the substitutes, we got some tremendous players."

Not Much A. L. Power

That's a diplomatic way of saying that the National League has more depth in talent. And this time, the National League also had tremendous depth in power. Of the American League's five leading home-run hitters, only Carl Yastrzemski was on the All-Star squad. Yaz is third with 16 homers. None of the other leaders were elected or named—Sal Bando, George Hendrick, Lee May and Jim Rice—and such sluggers as Reggie Jackson, Joe Rudi and John Mayberry are having, for them off years.

"I didn't have my good fastball," said John (The Count) Montefusco, the National League's answer to Mark Fidrych, "but I didn't need it against the All-Star Game, as Home runs often dominate the All-Star Game, as Foster's and Cedeño's did. In their batting order, the American League had some exceptional hitters, such as Rod Carew and George Brett, but few power hitters despite Fred Lynn's homer."

"Next year," said John Montefusco, "they should split up the National League team and forget about the American League team."

John Montefusco had pitched two hitless innings in celebrating his three-day reprieve from the San Francisco Giants, the team apparently sentenced to last place in the National League West.

"They should let the American League play Montreal next year," The Count said. "No, let them play San Francisco."

Before the game, when President Ford visited each clubhouse, The Count had asked him for "Federal aid for a disastrous team," meaning the Giants. Perhaps more than most of the National League players, The Count appreciated what the Reds meant to the victory.

"Bench, Perez, Rose, Morgan, they get you up," The Count said. "They're winners."

With his contribution to the National League cause, The Count had upstaged The Bird.

"Fidrych came in here with a 9-an-2 record and a 1.78 earned-run average, I had a 7-and-8 record, I had to keep my mouth shut," The Count said. "If I were 16 and 3 like Randy Jones is, I'd have heally popped off. The Bird told me that if the National League won, he'd blow up my car. I'd better keep it in the garage. I'm only kidding — but I don't know about him, he's a little weird."

Discussing Cedeño's Hands

President Ford enjoyed The Bird and The Count, but most of all he seemed to enjoy how the Reds play baseball.

"When Morgan and Concepcion made that slick double play in the first inning," Joe Garagiola recalled, "the President said, 'No wonder they're in first place.' He knows the game."

The President had requested that the inimitable NBC sportscaster accompany him on Air Force One to and from the All-Star Game.

"I think the most excited the President got was when Pete Rose slid head first into third base on his triple," Joe Garagiola said. "You know he's a fan when he appreciates a triple."

Ernie Banks, the Hall of Fame slugger from the Chicago Cubs, also was in the Presidential party. And after Cedeño struck out in the sixth, Banks criticized his batting form.

"He holds his hands too high," Banks said.

When the Astro outfielder came up in the eighth, Banks mentioned it again.

"His hands do look a little high," the President agreed. "You guys are trying to make a broadcaster out of him," Joe Garagiola said. "He's not up there posing for a portrait."

"But his hands are too high," Banks repeated. Moments later Cedeño hit his two-run homer.

"If he listened to you guys," Joe Garagiola said, "he'd be going to air-conditioning school."

Everybody laughed. And later, Joe Garagiola thanked the President for inviting him along.

"This is the greatest year," Joe Garagiola said, "that I've ever had in one day."

Pate in Field for $300,000 Westchester Classic Today

By GORDON S. WHITE Jr.
Special to The New York Times

HARRISON, N.Y., July 14—Jerry Pate's first Professional Golfers' Association tournament as a pro was the 1975 Westchester Classic. Although he was the 1974 United States amateur champion, fans were asking, "Who's he?"

Pate will tee off tomorrow, along with 167 other professionals in the 10th Westchester Classic and fans this year will be saying, "Oh, there's Jerry Pate, the United States Open champion."

They also will be saying, "There are Gary [Player] at 18 [Nicklaus] and over there are Johnny Miller and Tom Weiskopf. And, look, isn't that Gene Littler, who won this last year, when he beat Julius [Boros] in a playoff? There's Julius, and Arnie [Palmer] himself."

All those pros and many other well-known players will tee off at the Westchester Country Club because the $300,000 Westchester Classic is the second of the two designated tournaments on the P.G.A. circuit this year. The first was the Tournament Players Championship, which was won by Nicklaus in February.

Most of the pros are eager to be here for the 72-hole Classic because the purse has been increased and the first prize is $60,000.

Pate, the 22-year-old who won the United States Open in Atlanta last month, played in the preliminary pro-amateur event today shooting "a 75, I think."

Pate Needed Money

Remembering the 1975 Westchester Classic as if it were only yesterday, Pate said, "I just wanted to play well and make some money. I needed money because I had just borrowed some and had been playing in Europe, where I didn't make much."

Pate, who was second to Weiskopf after the first round at Westchester last year, finished tied for 18th place and earned $3,250. The United States Open champion said today, "Three thousand dollars is a 21-year-old is really something."

He is now 15th on the 1976 P.G.A. money list with $88,- 482. And that's really something for a 22-year-old.

Player, who said, "I haven't been playing worth a damn in the last month," had an amazing round of 33,33-66 today, hitting each of the 18 greens in regulation figures.

"You don't have many rounds when you do that," Player said. "You know, I experimented a lot and I just made a big change in my swing. I've gone to a one-piece take-away. I had been using an early break."

Palmer gave his "Army" a thrill today by shooting 33,32-65 over the course, which is listed at 6,603 yards. Arnie won the 1971 Westchester Classic and has taken only one individual P.G.A. victory since — the 1973 Bob Hope Classic.

Palmer, Pate and Miller Barber make up a threesome that will tee off at the 10th hole tomorrow at 12:54 P.M.

All Ex-Winners Present

All of the former winners of this tournament will compete here tomorrow. In addition to Palmer and Littler there will be Nicklaus, who won the first Classic in 1967

LOT-LICENSED

A UNIQUE COMBINATION OF THE CAR YOU REALLY WANT AND THE CAR YOU REALLY NEED.

Eventually into each life a practical car must come. Something economical. Something with room for four. Something called a "Family Car." Of course, to driving enthusiasts, those who crave the sweeping curve, the open highway—the very words "Family Car" conjure up all sorts of gloom and boredom.

But to the owner of a BMW 2002, it may actually mean a step up from the sports car he grudgingly parted with when the baby arrived.

The 2002 is practical and economical and roomy, yet so exceptional that for the past ten years it has utterly dominated its class on the great race courses of the world.

A car so thoroughly satisfying to drive that, for an unheard of seven years running, the readers of Car & Driver magazine voted it, "The Best Sports Sedan in the World."

Its renowned 2-liter engine develops exhilarating power. With a reliability and a turbine-like smoothness that never fails to impress even the experts.

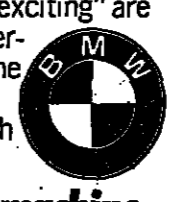

Its suspension system—independent on all four wheels, with a multi-jointed rear axle—allows each wheel to adapt itself instantly to every driving situation.

with an agility and a precision that will spoil you for any other car.

And for all its sports car characteristics—the BMW 2002 is every inch a true family car. Even in the rear there's more than ample room for life-sized adults.

Before you resign yourself to the notion that "practical" and "exciting" are words that describe two different cars, we urge you to phone one of the BMW dealers listed and arrange a thorough test drive of the 2002.

The ultimate driving machine.

There seems to be no reason for businessmen to come to New York for the convention. Almost none are delegates, the modest fundraising permitted under the new campaign laws is largely over, and Jimmy Carter has never been particularly attractive to them anyway.

A Broker Who Bought Morse Electro

By ROBERT METZ

A broker who looks for hidden values recently examined the Morse Electro Products Corporation and concluded that the company's stock was undervalued.

He reasoned that this producer of moderately priced stereo consoles had a book value of $1.12 after a loss equal to $3.34 a share in the fiscal year ended March 31, 1974.

The red ink continued in the nine months ended Dec. 31, 1973, when Morse had a deficit equal to $1.91 more than the book value.

However, the stock did not open on Tuesday, and at 10:28 A.M., the company announced an unexpectedly large $36.5 million loss, which more than wiped out shareholder equity.

Morse stock did not trade at all Tuesday. The broker, sadly surveying the damage, now believes that Morse will become a delisting candidate since the Big Board requires net tangible assets of $6 million and average net after-tax earnings of $600,000 a year over the most recent three years.

The company announced that its domestic banks had agreed in principle to waive defaults on loans and to negotiate for a possible restructuring of the bank debt maturing July 31 to Aug. 31, 1976.

The company also requested a waiver of default under certain covenants in its long-term note under which $23 million of debt is outstanding. The holder of this debt was said to have advised the company that it intended to recommend the waiver to its board of directors.

The New York Stock Exchange announced yesterday that trading in the common shares of Morse would remain halted pending completion of an analysis by the company of the $36.5 million loss. The shares did not trade yesterday.

Bank Portfolios

A summary of the gains and losses of equities held by 127 leading banks reporting to the Comptroller of the Currency shows that the average bank equity portfolio did worse than the Standard & Poor's index of 500 stocks in the quarter ended June 30.

The summary, prepared by Computer Directions Advisors Inc. of Silver Spring, Md., also indicates that banks do not, as is often thought, invest on a consistently conservative basis. Some of the bank equity portfolios are 30 percent less volatile than the S.&P. index and at least one is 30 percent more volatile.

Computer Directions points out that the banks only report stockholdings of more than 10,000 shares and notes that some small holdings are not reflected in the survey. There may also be instances in which the bank does not have discretion over particular investments, it adds.

The table below shows the performance for the latest quarter and for the year to date of banks in the Computer Directions summary, with equity portfolios exceeding $4 billion. In every case these banks' holdings were somewhat more volatile than the S.&P. 500. Both Citicorp and Morgan Guaranty Trust had holdings 14 percent more volatile than the S.&P. 500.

Business Briefs

I.R.S. Posts Rule on Oil Tax

WASHINGTON, July 14 (UPI)—The Internal Revenue Service said today oil companies would have to pay royalties to foreign governments before taking a credit for foreign taxes against United States income taxes.

The oil industry-looked foreign tax credits to reduce United States taxable income by more than $5 billion in 1973, the latest year for which data are available.

An I.R.S. spokesman said it was not possible to determine immediately the value of credits that might be lost under the ruling. To be eligible for the tax credit, the I.R.S. said a corporation first would have to pay royalties to a foreign government.

Then if the foreign government imposed any additional charges, these would be assessed by I.R.S. to determine whether they were actually taxes for the purpose of tax credit in the United States.

Amtrak Adding Rail Facilities

WASHINGTON, July 14 (AP)—Amtrak is taking command of an additional 722 miles of track, along with hundreds of railway stations, and officials say ownership should improve services and facilitate renovation of depots.

A massive series of property transfers that began April 1, under the Federal Rail Reorganization Act are continuing. Amtrak has been leasing much of the property from financially ailing rail lines. The purchases total nearly $80 million and include a dozen major repair facilities, 722 miles of track and hundreds of passenger stations, rail cars and locomotives.

Soviet Industrial Output Up

MOSCOW, July 14 (AP)—Soviet industrial output in the first six months of this year was 5 per cent above the like period in 1973, the Soviet press agency Tass reported today. It said the half-year figures exceeded the plan that calls for an increase in industrial production for the entire year of 4.3 per cent.

Tass, which released the figures on a Council of Ministers meeting, said above-plan industrial production from January through June was worth $5.3 billion.

Premier Alexei N. Kosygin presided over the council that ordered special emphasis be given to agricultural technology, upcoming harvests, the protection of grain supplies and the preparation of animal feed.

Denmark Pulls Out of Oil Plan

COPENHAGEN, July 14 (Reuters)—The Danish Government has abandoned plans for state participation in offshore oil and gas development in Denmark's sector of the North Sea, Preber Vilhelm, a member of the Parliamentary Underground Resources committee said.

Mr. Vilhelm told reporters after a closed committee session that the state's demands for participation in Danish underground Consortium (Danish A. P. Moeller, Shell, Chevron and Texaco), the sole concessionaire in the Danish sector, had been dropped completely in a draft for a new state-D.U.C. agreement.

The Government has been negotiating with D.U.C. for the past six months to reduce its role in the North Sea on the ground that the consortium had failed to fulfill the terms of the concession.

Mr. Vilhelm said he had disclosed the confidential committee draft because he believed the Government should try for compulsory state participation in D.U.C.

Trade Minister Jensen would not comment on the disclosure but said the committee would have an opportunity to discuss this when it meets again tomorrow.

Extension of Lira Plan Near

BRUSSELS, July 14 (Reuters)—The European Common Market commission approved in principle an extension of the Italian import deposit plan due to expire Aug. 5, informed sources said today. The purpose of the plan, introduced in May, is to defend the lira.

The decision will be formally announced next week once Common Market member states have endorsed the commission ruling, the sources said.

Opposition from the other eight members is unlikely they said.

Personal Finance: Divorce and Taxes

By ROBERT J. COLE
In a "60 Minutes" television program, originally shown in February, and repeated in June, a young couple identified as Chris and Anita Murray of New York were filmed where, for tax purposes, they had divorced the next year and remarried the next year.

As had already been discovered by thousands of other similar couples, it was much cheaper from a tax standpoint for two well paid people earning roughly the same salary to file separately as single taxpayers than to file jointly as a married couple.

It followed then that to be divorced in one year—even for only a brief time—the Murrrays could take advantage of this quirk in the tax law and save money. Unfortunately, the Internal Revenue Service saw the program too. In fact, in a letter to the television show read on the program soon after the repeat presentation, the I.R.S. called the divorce-remarriage "a sham" and said it would soon issue a ruling saying so.

EGYPTION MIXED IN NEW OFFERINGS

Corporate Issues Do Well - Municipal Prices Ease

By DOUGLAS W. CRAY

A variety of new offerings are well received yesterday in the corporate, or taxable, sector of the credit markets on a day marked by some modest price declines in tax-exempt issues. The day's new municipal offerings thus credit off to a slower start. Government participants, in turn, were not surprised to learn yesterday afternoon that the Treasury Department is planning to sell $2.75 billion of two-year notes next Tuesday.

The note sale, "to raise new cash," is consistent with the Treasury's present borrowing plans.

The Treasury said lenders for the two-year notes must be in minimum amounts of $5,000 and will be receivable until 1:30 p.m. next Tuesday afternoon at any Federal Reserve Bank or branch.

Early Losses Recovered

In the Government market itself yesterday prices recovered early losses for the most part and closed slightly higher.

Meanwhile, in the corporate market rates were set in the concurrent $1.3 billion bond offerings scheduled for today by the Banks for Cooperatives and the Federal Intermediary Credit Banks.

The rate is 5.80 percent on the $365 million of Banks for Cooperatives six-month bonds due Feb. 1, 1977. On the $717 million F.I.C.B. nine-month bonds, the rate was set at 6.10 percent. The issue will be dated Aug. 2, 1976 and be priced at par.

In the corporate market yesterday, Rockwell International's $100-million of debentures and $100-million of notes were reportedly all sold as was Norway's offering of $100 million of $100 million of 8 1/4 percent notes.

Branch Airways $50-million of 10 percent senior notes, due in 1986, were offered at par by underwriters headed by Goldman Sachs & Co. and were said to be sold down to bag ends. The notes are rated Baa by Moody's and BB by Standard & Poor's.

An offering of 800,000 shares of Brooklyn Union Gas Company $2.47 cumulative preferred stock, at $26 per share, was made by underwriters headed by Merrill Lynch, Fenner & Smith Inc. and reportedly all sold by yesterday afternoon.

SOYBEAN FUTURES RISE DAILY LIMIT

Rumor of Chinese Purchase From Brazil Is a Factor

By ELIZABETH M. FOWLER

A rumor and strong soybean oil prices sent soybean futures up yesterday the daily limit of 20 cents a bushel. August delivery beans on the Chicago Board of Trade closed at $7.34 a bushel, up 20 cents.

The rumor about a possible purchase by China of 500,000 tons of soybeans from Brazil broadcast on a television program. Speculators responded with some enthusiastic buying.

Higher soybean oil prices which influenced soybeans, took their impetus from an order by the Soviet Union for 20,000 tons of competitive palm oil in world markets. Oil for August delivery closed at 23.43 cents a pound, up from the limit of 1 cent a pound.

Corn Prices Rise

Corn prices gained more than 9 cents a bushel with September closing at $3.06 1/2, perhaps because the Department of Agriculture reduced the corn carryover estimate at the season's end Sept. 30 from 362 million bushels to 313 million, by Moody's and BB by Standard & Poor's.

Wheat futures appeared to take their strength from higher bean and corn prices rather than any specific news. Wheat for September delivery closed at $3.79, up from $3.5 a bushel.

Common Market Unity

turned to economics and trade that they at last managed to institutionalize this drive in the Common Market.

It was a timid way of saying that what Mr. Schmidt had been saying more bluntly by himself, namely, that unless member countries can cut government spending, hold down inflation by squashing the wage-price spiral and create the social climate to make these unpopular measures politically feasible, their half-grown community will wither or even collapse.

Yet, there is nothing more crucial to national sovereignty, more intimate to established parliamentary democracy, than decisions about public spending, taxing and credit.

The idea of checking national budget plans with foreigners, however closely allied, goes to the heart of the nation-state question of who is ultimately in charge.

It remains to be seen, of course, whether premiers and finance ministers will really be willing or even able to do what is needed to bring their economic rhythms closer together when budgets have to be presented to critical parliaments, vociferous unions, and demanding electorates.

One reason the government heads were so pleased at the prospect of a European parliament with its own voter mandate was that it might help provide the absorptive framework to take common pressures of national governments when they seek to hold down budget deficits.

There was irony in the evolution of this new impulse toward what has come to be called "building Europe." It all began as a political idea, a grand design to create common structures that would prevent the catastrophe of recurrent European wars.

But the political effort foundered under the weight of national suspicions. The next try was through a common military establishment, but the European defense community was never even brought to life. It was when the core countries at $3.79, up from $3.5 a bushel. Brokerage firm computers with buy recommendations and similar indications on price charts led to speculative buying of world sugar futures on the New York Coffee and Sugar Exchange. Recent influences have been drought in Europe, a large grower of sugar beets, and drought in Australia, which grows both sugar cane and sugar beets. The Australian cane sugar crop apparently is doing well, but dryness has hurt the sugar beet crop.

The September world sugar delivery closed at 14.04 cents a pound, up from 13.62.

June Trade Deficit For Britain Grew To $648 Million

LONDON, July 14 (UPI)—Britain's trade deficit widened in June by $34.8 million to $648 million, the Department of Trade announced today.

The slowdown in savings inflows has aroused fears in the thrift industry that disintermediation was under way again. This is the process by which consumer savings bypass the thrift institutions, which are intermediaries, and flow directly into the money market when interest yields are higher there.

University Is Dropping Tenured Staff Members

Dr. Murphy said that Queens was planning $3.2 million of cuts from a budget that last year was $53 million. This $3 million less than the quota Dr. Kibben had assigned to the college. He says it is $11.2 million, Dr. Murphy said, "but I don't know the foggist idea how to do that."

The president of Queens said that $5 million of his reduction would come from instructional costs, which comes to 298 persons out of a faculty of 1,300. The heaviest cuts, he stated, will be in the education and physical education departments, both of which will be reduced by 45 percent, and in student personnel services. However, he added that "no department is immune."

Dr. Murphy said that there was "no question that we will be into tenure in some departments." He estimated that dismission slips would have to be sent to somewhere between 15 and 20 tenured professors. Three other colleges reported that they probably would have to eliminate some tenured positions.

Dr. Robert J. Kilian, director of the university's budget, said that he would have to dismiss approximately 60 of his 600 members. About a third of this reduction has already been achieved by not filling vacancies this year, so this translates into 55 to 60 persons still on the payroll. "We may be moving into the altered form, it became the Lake House Hotel. One wing was used as a bowling alley. Later that wing was moved again and Dr. Wrege suspects that it is now Alexander's news store.

Records of many of the sales are incomplete, Dr. Wrege said, probably because some of the deals may have been rigged or made under the table. Thus, he is almost certain, but not completely sure, that two wings of the Southern Restaurant, a private venture at the Centennial, became the Avon and Red Bank stations of the New York and Long Branch Railroad. The Red Bank station still stands.

There are some buildings that diligent detective work has not turned up. The Arkansas Building was supposed to have gone to Ocean Grove, but it cannot be found. The New York Times said the Centennial Bank was going to Ocean Grove, too. Other reports had it destined for Ocean beach (Belmar). It could not be traced.

Dr. Wrege suspects that a building at the exposition known as Froebel's Model Kindergarten may be the peculiarly shaped St. Peters by the Sea church at Cape May Point. And he thinks, too, that pieces of the Bankers' Pavilion may have found their way into the electric Brunswick Hotel.

1876 Centennial Buildings Live On

Continued From Page 37. The Delaware Building and the Colorado-Kansas Building both became hotels in Belmar, as did the Glass Magazine, a building in which glass artifacts were sold. All three have long disappeared from their ocean-front sites.

Some people probably have parts of Centennial buildings in their homes and do not know it. The Agricultural Hall, which covered 8.5 acres and was built almost entirely of wood, was bought by James Hunter for $13,100.

Mr. Hunter got several million board feet of nearly new lumber when he dismantled the hall. He used it to build a number of houses in the Spring Lake area.

Dr. Wrege, a professor at Rutgers, is a student of the Centennial, because the Avon and Red Bank stations of the New York and Long Branch Railroad. The Red Bank station still stands.

Weather Reports and Forecast

Summary

Fair or partly cloudy skies will cover the Northeast today. Thunderstorms are likely in the upper Ohio Valley, while scattered showers and thundershowers may occur from the eastern lake region and the Ohio Valley through the southern half of the Mississippi Valley into Florida, the Gulf Coast, Texas and southeastern New Mexico; widely scattered thundershowers may also develop across the northern portions of New Mexico and Arizona. Clouds will cover the north-central border states; scattered light rain may fall in North Dakota. It will be clear to partly cloudy elsewhere. Except for hot weather from Washington to northern California, and in the desert Southwest, mild or warm weather will prevail throughout the country.

Cloudy to partly cloudy skies covered the eastern third of the country yesterday; showers and thundershowers developed along the coast of New England, in the eastern lake region, Iowa and the lower Mississippi Valley. Low clouds clinging to the western Gulf Coast as showers and thundershowers continued throughout most of Texas. It was hot in the upper Mississippi Valley, and cooler in extreme northern sections of the Rockies.

Figure beside Station Circle is temperature. Cold front a boundary between cold air and warmer air, under which the colder air pushes the wedge, usually south and east. Warm front: a boundary between warm air and a retreating wedge of colder air over which the warm air is forced as it advances. Usually north and east. Occluded front: a line along which warm air was lifted by opposing wedges of cold air, often causing precipitation. Shaded areas indicate precipitation. Dashed lines show forecast afternoon maximum temperatures. Isobars are lines (solid black) of equal barometric pressure (in inches), forming a low pattern west. Winds are counterclockwise toward the center of low-pressure systems, clockwise outward from high-pressure areas. Pressure systems usually move east.

Sugar and spice and fire and ice

That's what today's consumer is made of. Sure, she still has all the sweetness and warm and tenderness nature has born into her. But along with it goes all the eruptive fire and icy suspiciousness life today has bred into her. Especially her consumer life.

You know it's true. And today, even the most painstakingly truthful and sincere of ads has to contend with her blanketing skepticism. And find ways to break through that disbelief.

The best way to do it is by word of mouth. You know she'll be sure to try your product if she hears about it through a good friend. But how do you manage that?

Speak your message in Good Housekeeping. Because to her Good Housekeeping is just the best friend.

It's not just a magazine. It is a good friend. A good friend that has for almost 100 years taken special pains not to mislead her or allow anything in its pages editorial or advertising, that might.

Today's new consumer knows that. Even more than her mother did.

It is one place today, despite the general climate of bombast and bah-humbugs and skepticism where your advertising will be greeted with confidence and respect.

She's
